

“The Labors of Sisyphus”

"We can't all be philosophers—who would herd the pigs then?"

"If ever in a dream you feel that my eyes no longer look upon you with love, know that I am no longer alive..."

“The Homeless”

"There is only one true evil: the wrong done to another. A human being is sacred and must not be harmed. [...] The boundary of wrongdoing lies within the conscience, within the human heart."

"Yes, without a doubt: the village was created by God, and the city by the devil."

"At every step you find people content—with themselves—but never truly joyful."

"Why do you wish to build a ship from me, a broken pine? Was it not enough that the storm already shattered me once upon the land?"

“The Coming Spring”

"Everyone has a beloved place from childhood. That is the homeland of the soul."

“The Ashes”

"Can the same hand truly create both good and evil?"

"The History of Sin"

"[...] I wish I possessed all the eyes on Earth—just to look at you."

"Only the future exists. I wait, I wait, I wait... days, hours, minutes..."
