From Cardiff to Edinburgh, here are our users' favourite urban and countryside rambles.

A) Edinburgh: Arthur's Seat

This walk begins and ends beside one of its highlights – the Scottish parliament and Holyrood palace. Ascend into Holyrood Park, where a small detour reveals a view of the remains of St Anthony's Chapel, before you reach a small plateau below the summit of Arthur's Seat. Enjoy the panorama of the city, then take a grassy descent to Dunsapie Loch and its ducks and swans. The route goes down towards Old Church Lane and the Sheep Heid Inn (said to be the oldest serving pub in the city), ahead of the Innocent Railway along the foot of the hill and the Innocent Railway tunnel (the first one created in Scotland). The walk skirts the tunnel, but you can also walk through it. Go back up to the foot of Arthur's Seat, where Salisbury Crags offers more panoramic photo opportunities, particularly at night with Edinburgh Castle lit up below.

B) London: Parkland Walk (Finsbury Park to Alexandra Palace)

Popular with the capital's joggers and podcast listeners, this green finger through north London is a wonderful antidote to city life. The first section, from Finsbury Park to Highgate, is flat and lined on both sides with trees higher than a cathedral roof. After a pause for coffee in Archway Road, continue through residential streets, then navigate beneath oak trees (raining acorns at this time of year) in the Queen's Wood local nature reserve and Highgate Wood before ascending to Alexandra Park and the reward of southward views over London from the majestic vantage point outside the front of Alexandra Palace.

C) Near Birmingham: Monarch's Way, Halesowen

For a true countryside adventure, this trek through fields, woods and farmland with the Clent Hills looming large on the horizon is the perfect choice. It's just eight miles from Birmingham city centre and five miles from Dudley. Leave behind the busy A56 and begin the route close to the medieval ruins of Halesowen Abbey. Follow the well-maintained Monarch's Way from stile to stile, crossing streams and passing through pasture, copses and grasslands. The route does get muddy in places at this time of year. Check the weather before setting off, as you can be exposed to the elements quickly.

Exploring Persistence: a Quality to Consider

Being persistent is a key ingredient in 8. _____ intentions to fulfill goals and maximize self-potential. It is an element that is required in a multitude of fields today and, really, life in general. Not only is this quality beneficial for intimate activities, but it also prospers maturity, an increase in knowledge, and curiosity in life.

Now, an active topic arises—how do we remain persistent with all of the things life throws 9. _____ us? Simple, but simultaneously complex.

People are like fingerprints—everyone is different. The roots behind 10. _____ people act the way they do are complex. Life can be thought of as 11. _____ spider's web; everything is connected to some degree.

Everyone is born with a moral foundation, which evolves over time as a result of external influences and surroundings. Understanding this, 12. _____ the seemingly incomprehensible actions one may take, is important.

There are many factors to account for before truly dissecting persistence, as there are many people who have to withstand hardships. This 13. _____ for familial ties and influence, relationships that cause one to give up, not believing in oneself, or simply not trying. Have you ever walked around in an area filled with other people and thought to yourself about their perspective on life?
