The United States might be the home of the free and the land of the brave, but it's also incredibly 39._____ to travellers who come here from the rest of the world! While some things are the same everywhere, and others have become mainstream thanks to the export of US pop culture, there are plenty of things that seem totally normal to natives, yet bizarre to everyone else. And of course, it works 40._____ ways. US travellers in the rest of the world are often surprised when something that they do automatically at home is looked at as strange - or even insulting.

From the money to the food, schooling to home, and of course - the sheer size of everything in the US, these(...) things are part of day to day life in the United States - but are sure to leave visitors raising their 41._____ in confusion! Some of these everyday customs are even starting to be questioned at home, as people realize that maybe the way that the rest of the world deals with something actually makes more 42._____.

The US definitely has unique currency - and travellers are often confused when it comes to finding the right bill, because they are all the same size and colour. In many other countries, different denominations are different shades (and even sizes), making it 43. _____ to pull the right bill out of a wallet without having to peer at the numbers on it.

In many other countries of the world, if you want to pick up a prescription or a snack at 3am, you are going to be 44._____ luck, and in some places, this may happen during lunch times, siesta times, early evenings, or Sundays. In the US, 45._____, the country is liberally sprinkled with 24 hour options; diners, coffee shops, pharmacies, supermarkets, big box stores, everything.

Time to head back to food - and to the 46._____ portions that are pretty much everywhere in the US. Fine dining restaurants may serve much smaller plates, but going to any major restaurant is going to involve getting several times more food than you would elsewhere.(...)

How going phone-free taught pupils at English secondary to socialise.

At Tenbury High students play tag rather than stare at screens after it brought in one of toughest phone rules.

Vicki Dean, the principal of Tenbury High academy, says visitors to her secondary school in the Worcestershire countryside think its pupils appear less mature than others their age because they are running about and playing rather than sitting and staring at their phones.

“When I worked at my previous school, I still remember social time was like this,” Dean said, mimicking holding a phone screen in front of her face. 47)_____ “Here, our children in year 8 are still playing chase and tag because they have got nothing else to distract them. They want to play football, they are being creative, it’s old-school playing,”

Pupils are allowed to get their phones back at the end of each school day.

“Visitors sometimes say, your children seem immature, but I don’t think they are. I just think they are seeing them play. In villages, when children don’t play when they get home in the evenings because they are geographically isolated, they need to learn to play and interact (...).

So we have to work on social time behaviour and what to do and keep them entertained.

48)_____ “They are learning to socialise, old school.” Tenbury up until last year allowed pupils to use phones during “social time” before the bell for the start of school. But Dean said even that had been stopped, and pupils now had to hand in their phones as soon as they arrive.

49)_____ “We know that they have to bring their phones, because we’re a rural school some of them are travelling long distances, they need to feel safe on their journeys and be able to phone their parents,” Dean said.

“So what we’ve done is make the phone handing-in process more secure. The children are told that their phones are going in a safe place, and they are going to be kept safe all day and looked after. 50)_____. It’s about building trust with us, so students can feel confident that we are going to look after them. Adapted from: www.theguardian.com

- A) Two minutes before the end of the school day, their teacher hands back their phones as they leave.
- B) The school environment is very much about focus, motivation and thinking hard about things, and mobile phones promote the opposite.
- C) We buy equipment and have lots of sports clubs to keep them busy.
- D) Each phone is held in a padded box and they will come out in the same state as they went in.
- E) But Tenbury is different, with one of the toughest phone-free rules of any mainstream state secondary school in England, and Dean says that has influenced how her pupils act.
