1. Section 1- Introduction and key concepts

This Guidance should be read in conjunction with the following, which are available on the FATF website: www.fatf-gafi.org.

- a) The FATF Recommendations, especially Recommendations 1, 10, 11, 12, 17, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25 and 28 and their Interpretive Notes (INR), and the FATF Glossary
- b) Other relevant FATF Guidance documents such as:
 - The FATF Guidance on National Money Laundering and Terrorist Financing Risk Assessment (February 2013)
 - FATF Guidance on the Risk-Based Approach for Trust and Company Service Providers (TCSPs)
 - FATF Guidance on the Risk-Based Approach for Accountants
 - FATF Guidance on Transparency and Beneficial Ownership (October 2014)
- c) Other relevant FATF Reports such as:
 - FATF Report on Money Laundering and Terrorist Financing: Vulnerabilities of Legal Professionals (June 2013)
 - The Joint FATF and Egmont Group Report on Concealment of Beneficial Ownership (July 2018)

1.1. Background and context

1. The risk-based approach (RBA) is central to the effective implementation of the revised FATF International Standards on Combating Money Laundering and the Financing of Terrorism and Proliferation, which were adopted in 2012². The FATF has reviewed its 2008 RBA Guidance for legal professionals, in order to bring it in line with the new FATF requirements³ and to reflect the experience gained by public authorities and the private sector over the years in applying the RBA. This revised version applies to legal professionals when they prepare for, or carry out, transactions for their clients concerning certain specified activities⁴.

2. This Guidance was drafted by a Project Group comprising FATF members and representatives of the private sector. The Project group was co-led by the UK, the United States, the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, the International Bar Association and the Society of Trust and Estate Practitioners. Membership of the Project Group is set out in Annex 5.

⁴ The services provided by legal professionals include those provided by both lawyers and notaries, and these services are included under bullet (e) of the definition of “Designated non-financial businesses and professions” in the FATF Glossary. For details about specified activities of legal professionals under R.22 and other FATF Recommendations applicable to the legal professionals, please refer to paragraph 12 and 51 of this Guidance.

3. The FATF adopted this updated RBA Guidance for legal professionals at its XXX Plenary.

1.2. Purpose of the Guidance

4. The purpose of this Guidance is to:
- a) Assist all legal professionals in the design and implementation of a RBA to AML/CFT compliance by providing guidelines and examples of current practice, with a particular focus on providing guidance to sole practitioners and small firms;
 - b) Support a common understanding of a RBA for legal professionals, financial institutions and designated non-financial businesses and professions (DNFBPs)⁵ that maintain relationships with legal professionals (e.g., through pooled or client accounts or for trust and company accounts) and competent authorities and self-regulatory bodies (SRBs)⁶ responsible for monitoring the compliance of legal professionals with their AML/CFT obligations;
 - c) Outline the key elements involved in applying a RBA to AML/CFT applicable to legal professionals;
 - d) Assist financial institutions and DNFBPs that have legal professionals as customers in identifying, assessing and managing the ML/TF risk associated with legal professionals and their services;
 - e) Assist countries, competent authorities and SRBs in the implementation of the FATF Recommendations with respect to legal professionals, particularly R.22, 23 and 28;
 - f) Assist countries, SRBs and the private sector to meet the requirements expected of them, particularly under IO.3 and IO.4;
 - g) Support the effective implementation of action plans of national risk assessments (NRAs) conducted by countries; and
 - h) Support the effective implementation and supervision by countries of national AML/CFT measures, by focusing on risks as well as preventive and mitigating measures.

1.3. Target audience, status and content of the Guidance

5. This Guidance is aimed at the following audience:
- a) Legal professionals;
 - b) Countries and their competent authorities, including AML/CFT supervisors of legal professionals, AML/CFT supervisors of banks that have legal professionals as customers, and Financial Intelligence Units (FIUs); and
 - c) Practitioners in the banking sector, other financial services sectors and DNFBPs that have legal professionals as customers.
6. The Guidance consists of four sections. Section I sets out introduction and key concepts. Section II contains key elements of the RBA and should be read in conjunction with specific guidance to legal professionals (Section III) and guidance to supervisors of legal professionals on the effective implementation of a RBA (Section IV). There are five annexes on:

⁶ see definition of the term ‘Self-regulatory body’ in the FATF Glossary.

- a) Beneficial ownership information in relation to a company, trust or other legal arrangements to whom a legal professional provides services (Annex 1);
- b) Sources of further information (Annex 2);
- c) Glossary of terminology (Annex 3);
- d) Red flag indicators highlighting suspicious activities or transactions for legal professionals (Annex 4); and
- e) Members of the RBA Drafting Group (Annex 5).

7. This Guidance recognises that an effective RBA will take account of the national context, consider the legal and regulatory approach and relevant sector guidance in each country, and reflect the nature, diversity and maturity of a country's legal professionals, the risk profile of the legal professionals' sector, the risk profile of individual legal professionals operating in the sector and their clients. It sets out different elements that countries and legal professionals could consider when designing and implementing an effective RBA.

8. This Guidance is non-binding and does not overrule the purview of national authorities⁷, including on their local assessment and categorisation of legal professionals based on the prevailing ML/TF risk situation and other contextual factors. It draws on the experiences of countries and of the private sector to assist competent authorities and legal professionals to implement effectively applicable FATF Recommendations. Legal professionals should also refer to relevant legislation and sector guidance of the country where their clients are based.

1.4. Scope of the Guidance: terminology, key features and business models

1.4.1. Terminology

Legal professionals

9. The FATF Recommendations apply to legal professionals when they prepare for or undertake specified transactional activities (see below) and do not apply to all activities carried out by legal professionals. Most notably, litigation is not a specified activity, and a legal professional representing a client in litigation will not be subject to the FATF Recommendations; unless during the course of such representation the legal professional additionally engages in one or more specified activities, in which case the Recommendations will apply to this specified activity or activities only. The FATF Recommendations do not apply where a person provides legal services 'in-house' as an employee of an entity that does not provide legal services.

10. The legal sector comprises a broad spectrum of practitioners and are not a homogenous group, from one country to another or even within a country. For the purposes of this Guidance, legal professionals include barristers, solicitors and other specialist advocates and notaries. In addition to obligations they may owe through the contracting of their services, legal professionals owe special duties both to their clients (e.g. duties of confidentiality and loyalty), as well as 'public' duties to the legal institutions of their jurisdictions (e.g. through roles such as 'officers of the court'). These duties are designed to assist in the administration of justice and promote the rule of law, and generally set legal professionals apart from other professional advisors. In many jurisdictions, these duties and obligations are enshrined in law, regulations or court rules pursuant to historic and well established practices.

11. Titles given to different legal professionals vary among countries and legal systems, with the same title not always having the same meaning or area of responsibility. Although some common elements may exist based on whether the country has a common law or civil law tradition, even these generalisations will not always hold true. As the range of services provided and carried out by legal professionals is diverse and varies widely from one country to another, it is important to understand the specific roles undertaken by different legal professionals within their respective countries when assessing the AML/CFT obligations of the legal profession sector, as well as how these services interact with those of other professionals. Many legal professionals are required to comply with specific national legislation, rules and regulations adopted by professional associations or other SRBs.

12. R.22 provides that the requirements of the Recommendations apply to legal professionals when they prepare for and carry out transactions for their clients concerning certain specified activities, namely:

- a) Buying and selling of real estate;
- b) Managing of client money, securities or other assets;
- c) Management of bank, savings or securities accounts;
- d) Organisation of contributions for the creation, operation or management of companies; and
- e) Creation, operation or management of legal persons or arrangements, and buying and selling of business entities.

13. The FATF Recommendations set an international standard, which countries should implement through measures adapted to their particular circumstances. In general terms, jurisdictions have closely followed the FATF Recommendations but differences exist and legal professionals need to carefully consider the laws, rules and regulations of the relevant jurisdictions as implemented in such jurisdictions. The overarching concept of the obligations applying to certain specified activities (as set out in paragraph 12) is considered to be common across all jurisdictions.

14. Some legal professionals and law firms may accordingly be able to conclude that based on the services they provide, they do not have any specific AML/CFT obligations as they do not prepare for, or carry out any of the specified activities. Even though specific AML/CFT obligations may not apply to a legal professional or a law firm, it is consistent with the overall ethics and best practices of the profession for all legal professionals to ensure that their services are not being misused, including by criminals. Accordingly, legal professionals and law firms should carefully consider what they need to do to guard against that risk irrespective of the application of specific AML/CFT obligations in order not to be unwittingly involved in ML/TF.

Legal professionals

15. Legal professionals provide advisory services and representation to members of society, companies and other entities to:

- a) understand their increasingly complex legal rights and obligations;
- b) facilitate business transactions;
- c) assist their clients to comply with laws; and

d) provide access to justice and judicial redress.

16. They may provide these services alone, in collaboration with other independent legal professionals or as partners or as members of a law firm. A firm may consist of a sole practitioner or a few practitioners or thousands of legal professionals spread throughout numerous offices around the globe. There are also alternative business structures in which legal professionals combine with non-legal professionals to form partnerships. Most legal professionals practise alone or with other legal professionals in small firms.

17. Legal professionals include barristers, solicitors and other types of specialist advocates, however called. Typically, these legal professionals represent clients in court and also, in some countries, provide advisory services that might include one of the specified activities in R.22 and, as set forth above, they will therefore need to comply in respect of such services.

18. Services provided globally by legal professionals include advising on clients' financial transactions and legal structures that involve financial or business arrangements. As a result of their regulated status and to assist clients in transactions, legal professionals may also hold clients' funds in designated accounts or agree to act on behalf of clients (e.g. under a power of attorney) in relation to specific aspects of transactions. However, the counselling and advisory roles of legal professionals, especially in an increasing regional and global marketplace, do not generally involve handling funds. Legal professionals frequently work in collaboration with other professional advisors on transactions, such as accountants, TCSPs, escrow agents and title insurance companies and may refer their clients to particular professionals for services. Flows of funds are also often dealt with and facilitated exclusively by financial institutions.

19. The work of legal professionals is fundamental to promoting adherence to the rule of law in the countries in which they practice. Legal professionals typically have their own professional and codes of ethics and conduct by which they are regulated. Breaches of the obligations imposed upon them can result in a variety of sanctions, including disciplinary and criminal sanctions.

Legal professional privilege and professional secrecy

20. The provisions in this Guidance are subject to applicable professional privilege and professional secrecy. Privilege/professional secrecy is a protection to the client, and a duty of the legal professional. It aims to protect information or advice from being disclosed (e.g. to a relevant authority) as well as from being subject to disclosure in judicial proceedings in some jurisdictions. This nearly universal principle is based on the right of access to justice and the rationale that the rule of law is protected where clients are encouraged to communicate freely with their legal advisors without fear of disclosure or retribution.

21. Most jurisdictions seek to balance the right of access to justice and the public interest in investigating and prosecuting criminal activity. However, legal professional privilege does not protect a legal professional from knowingly facilitating a client's illegal conduct. If a legal professional engages in criminal conduct, that legal professional cannot claim that his/her conduct is privileged merely because he/she is a legal professional.

22. Each country needs to determine the matters that would fall under legal professional privilege or professional secrecy. This would normally cover some information that legal professionals, notaries or other independent legal professionals receive from or obtain through their clients: (a) in the course of ascertaining the legal position of their clients, or (b) in performing their task of defending or representing that clients in, or concerning judicial, administrative, arbitration or mediation proceedings. There may be cases in which these professionals conduct activities that are clearly covered by the legal privilege (i.e., ascertaining the legal position of their client or defending or representing their client in judicial proceedings) alongside activities that may not be covered by it.

23. A number of the DNFBP sectors, including legal professionals, are already subject to regulatory or professional requirements (including as promulgated by self-regulatory bodies (SRBs)) that complement AML/CFT measures. For example, by virtue of their professional codes of conduct, many legal professionals are already subject to an obligation to identify their clients (e.g. to check for conflict of interest) and the substance of the matter submitted to them by such clients, in order to appreciate the consequences that their advice may have. If a legal professional provides legal advice to a client that helps the client commit an offence, that legal professional may, depending on the legal professional's state of knowledge, become an accomplice to the offence.

24. This Guidance must be considered in the context of these professional and ethical codes of conduct. In situations where legal professionals are relying on legal professional privilege, they must be satisfied that the information is protected by the relevant rules. For example, it is important to distinguish between legal advice, which generally is subject to robust protections, and underlying facts, which in many cases are not protected by privilege.

25. The degree and scope of legal professional privilege and professional secrecy and the consequences of a breach of these protections vary from one country to another. In some jurisdictions, the protections of privilege and secrecy may be overridden by the consent or waiver of the client or by express provisions of law. Although considerations of privilege are most likely to be relevant in connection with reporting a suspicious transaction (see section 3.4.3 below), it is not as likely, relevant in the context of a RBA to client due diligence.

Notaries

26. Both civil and common law countries have notaries, but the main difference between them is based in their roles. In some common law countries, the notary public is a qualified, experienced practitioner, trained in the drafting and execution of legal documents. In other common law countries, the notary public is a public servant appointed by a governmental body to witness the signing of important documents (such as deeds and mortgages) and administer oaths. Notaries provide legal advice in the context of documenting transactions and legal arrangements, and do not necessarily direct this advice to a specific party. In some common law countries, such as the UK, the notary is no longer required for documenting transactions.

27. Most civil law notaries are members of autonomous legal professions (regulated by law) and qualified public officials, as they are appointed by the State through a selective public competition among law graduates. Civil law notaries, who are bound by an obligation of independence and impartiality with respect to parties to a transaction, must be regarded, in matters of real estate property (conveyancing), family law, inheritance and corporate legal services (e.g. the formation of companies, sale of shares, capital increases, liquidation and dissolution of companies), as practising non-adversarial activities. They act as gatekeepers by drafting and ensuring the legality and certainty of the instruments, and the authenticity of the content of the instrument and in some jurisdictions, also provide a public fiduciary function by performing the role of trusted third parties. Civil law notaries are obliged by law to remain impartial, fair and independent as between the parties they are advising, including bearing in mind any disparity of power between the parties. For this reason, civil law notaries are assigned functions of a public nature as part of their legal assignments and typically do not act for one of the parties in an advisory capacity.

28. If notaries are entrusted with public functions, they need to act in accordance with the principles of impartiality, legality, certainty and independence. Notarial written documents are recognised as a particular form of evidence, which is taken to be authoritative and in certain cases, as judicially enforceable as court orders and judgments. State powers are therefore effectively delegated to civil law notaries so that they can assign “public authority” to the deeds they perform and are responsible for. The obligations of fairness and public office mean that services performed by civil law notaries are often very different in nature to the services provided by other legal professionals.

29. Notaries are subject to a duty of professional secrecy, as well as generally being subject to a duty to respect rights to confidentiality. Notaries are the party to interpret these duties in the light of their overarching obligation to ensure the common good and the general interests of society. Therefore, in practice, professional secrecy is not an absolute duty and is often subordinated to the public interest. Notaries may also be required to disclose the contents of their archives and communications in criminal proceedings or when required by law. In the context of ML/TF, notaries are obliged to co-operate with law enforcement, and to disclose all the relevant information to the competent authorities, in accordance with the laws of the jurisdiction. Notification to public authorities of any suspicious transactions should not generally be considered as an infringement of the notary’s duty of professional secrecy.

30. This Guidance does not cover some common law notaries when those notaries perform merely administrative acts such as witnessing or authenticating documents, as these acts are not specified activities.

1.4.2. Services provided by legal professionals and notaries and their vulnerabilities for ML/TF

31. The activities of legal professionals are diverse, as are the applicable legal and professional obligations. Legal professionals may provide a vast range of services to a broad and diverse range of clients. For example, services may include (but are not restricted to):

- a) Advising on the purchase, sale, leasing and financing of real property;
- b) Tax advice;
- c) Advocacy before courts and tribunals;
- d) Representing clients in disputes and mediations;
- e) Advice in relation to divorce and custody proceedings;
- f) Advice on the structuring of transactions;
- g) Advisory services on regulations and compliance;
- h) Advisory services related to insolvency/receiver-managers/bankruptcy;
- i) Administration of estates and trusts;
- j) Assisting in the formation of entities and trusts;
- k) Trust and company services⁸;
- l) Legitimising signatures by confirming the identity of the signatory (in the case of notaries); and
- m) Overseeing the purchase of shares or other participations (also in the case of notaries).

⁸ For such activities, refer also to the guidance on risk-based approach for Trust and Company Service Providers (TCSPs).

32. While some of these services may involve activities that fall within the scope of the specified activities under R.22, not all will do so. It is important to bear in mind when considering the range of tasks undertaken by legal professionals that only specified activities under R.22 have to be subject to the AML/CFT regime.

33. The specifics of the risk-based processes of an individual legal professional and/or a firm of legal professionals should accordingly be determined based on the activities undertaken by the legal professional, the ethical and existing supervisory structure for legal professionals and the susceptibility or vulnerability of activities of a legal professional to ML/TF.

34. A RBA requires legal professionals to mitigate the risks that they face and with due regard to the resources available. Mitigating practices will invariably include initial CDD and ongoing monitoring, as well as a range of internal policies, training and systems to address the vulnerabilities faced in the particular practice setting of the legal professional. This section does not attempt to exhaustively list the mitigating practices that may be employed by legal professionals. For information on ways in which legal professionals might mitigate their vulnerabilities to ML/TF, see “Section 2 – Guidance for Legal professionals and Notaries” and chapters III and IV of the separate publication: “A Lawyer’s Guide to Detecting and Preventing Money Laundering” published in October 2014 by a collaboration of the International Bar Association, American Bar Association and the Council of Bars and Law Societies of Europe⁹.

35. As a matter of general principle legal professionals who are knowingly engaged in criminal activities do not warrant any special treatment. If they are so engaged, they are criminals and should be treated accordingly. The basic intent behind the FATF Recommendations is consistent with the role of legal professionals, as guardians of justice and the rule of law, and professionals subject to ethical obligations, namely to avoid knowingly assisting criminals or facilitating criminal activity. Some of the underlying ethical principles that the legal profession upholds, namely to avoid facilitating criminal activity and being unwittingly involved in the pursuit of criminal activity, supports the role that legal professionals need to play in the fight against ML/TF.

Client funds

36. Most legal professionals can hold funds of clients. Client accounts are accounts held by legal professionals with a financial institution. In some civil law countries, a professional body holds the funds of clients, rather than legal professionals. Operating client accounts does not automatically require a legal professional to observe AML/CFT obligations. These obligations apply when the accounts are used in conjunction with an activity that is specified in R.22.

37. In most countries, legal professionals are required to hold client funds in a separate account with a financial institution and use the funds only in accordance with their client’s instructions. In countries where client accounts are used, legal professionals are required to hold client funds separate from their own. The purpose of these accounts is to hold client funds in “trust” for or for a purpose designated by the client. Funds will also be held or received for payment of costs incurred by the legal professional on behalf of the client. No funds may pass through a client account without being attached to an underlying legal transaction or purpose, and the legal professional is required to account for these funds.

⁹ The full publication is available at:
<https://www.ibanet.org/Article/NewDetail.aspx?ArticleUid=f272a49e-7941-42ee-aa02-eba0bde1f144>

38. The use of client accounts has been identified as a potential vulnerability, as it may be perceived by criminals as a means to either integrate tainted funds within the mainstream financial system or a means by which tainted funds may be layered in such a way to obscure their source, with fewer questions being asked by financial institutions because of the perceived respectability and legitimacy added by the involvement of the legal professional. Legal professionals can seek to limit their exposure to this risk by developing and implementing policies on the handling of funds (e.g. currency value limits) as well as restricting access to account details to prevent unsanctioned deposits.

Advising on the purchase and sale of real property

39. Real estate, both commercial and residential, accounts for a high proportion of confiscated criminal assets, demonstrating that this as a clear area of vulnerability. In many countries, legal professionals are either required by law to undertake the transfer of property or their involvement is a matter of tradition, custom or practice. However, the specific role of legal professionals in real estate transactions varies significantly from country to country, or even within countries. In some countries, legal professionals will customarily hold or control (e.g. through a financial institution) and transfer or control the transfer of the relevant funds for the purchase of the real estate assets. In other countries this will be done by other parties, such as a title insurance company or escrow agent. Even if legal professionals are not handling the funds, they will typically be aware of the financial details and in many cases will be in a position to inquire about the transaction where appropriate.

40. Some criminals may seek to invest the proceeds of their crime in real estate without attempting to obscure their ownership of the real estate. Alternatively, criminals may seek to obscure the ownership of real property by using false identities or title the property in the names of family members, friends or business associates, or purchase property through an entity or a trust. Legal professionals will need to consider carefully who they are acting for at the outset of a real estate transaction, especially where there are multiple parties involved in a transaction. In some cases, legal professionals may also opt to apply specific checks on the settlement destinations of transactions (i.e. performing limited CDD on the seller of real property, when acting for the buyer).

Formation of companies and trusts¹⁰

41. In some countries, legal professionals (in civil law jurisdictions this will usually be a notary) must be involved in the creation of a company. In other countries members of the public are able to register a company themselves directly with the company register, in which case a legal professional's advice is sometimes sought at least in relation to initial liability management, corporate, tax and administrative matters.

42. Criminals may seek the opportunity to retain control over criminally derived assets while frustrating the ability of law enforcement to trace the origin and ownership of the assets. Companies and often trust and other similar legal arrangements are seen by criminals as potentially useful vehicles to achieve this outcome. While shell companies¹¹, which do not have any ongoing business activities or assets, may be used for legitimate purposes such as serving as a transaction vehicle, they may also be used to conceal beneficial ownership, or enhance the perception of legitimacy. Criminals may also seek to misuse shelf companies¹² formed by legal professionals by seeking access to companies that have been ‘sitting on the shelf’ for a long time. This may be in an attempt to create the impression that the company is reputable and trading in the ordinary course because it has been in existence for many years. Shelf companies can also add to the overall complexity of entity structures, further concealing the underlying beneficial ownership information.

Management of companies and trusts

43. In some cases, criminals will seek to have legal professionals involved in the management of companies and trusts in order to provide greater respectability and legitimacy to the company or trust and its activities. In some countries professional rules preclude a legal professional from acting as a trustee or as a company director, or require a disclosure of directorship positions to ensure independence and transparency is maintained. In countries where this is permitted, there are diverse rules as to whether that legal professional can also provide external legal advice or otherwise act for the company or trust. This will determine whether any funds relating to activities by the company or trust can go through the relevant legal professional’s client account. In addition, in some countries, the non-legal counsel of a legal professional acting in a business capacity may not be protected by the legal professional privilege.

Acting as nominee

44. Individuals may sometimes have legal professionals or other persons hold their shares as a nominees, where there are legitimate privacy, safety or commercial concerns. However, criminals may also use nominee shareholders to obscure their ownership of assets. In some countries, legal professionals are not permitted to hold shares in entities for whom they provide advice, while in other countries legal professionals regularly act as nominees. Legal professionals should identify beneficial owners when establishing business relations in these situations. This is important to prevent the unlawful use of legal persons and arrangements, by gaining a sufficient understanding of the client to be able to properly assess and mitigate the potential ML/TF risks associated with the business relationship. Where legal professionals are asked to act as nominees, they should understand the reason for this request and ensure that they are able to verify the identity of the beneficial owner of the shares and that the purpose is legitimate.

General management of client affairs

45. In some jurisdictions, legal professionals may undertake a range of ‘management’ activities for clients permitted in limited circumstances by some professional rules. In some European jurisdictions, this is sometimes referred to as ‘man of affairs work’. Situations where a legal professional may be undertaking these activities legitimately may involve a client who has limited capacity to manage his/her own affairs, or in other circumstances where the client has a clear legitimate rationale for seeking the continuing assistance from the legal professional. The legal professional, whether acting pursuant to a court order or a power of attorney, may use his/her client account to undertake transactions, but would more typically use accounts held by the client for whom the legal professional is acting. While ordinarily this type of activity should give the legal professional access to sufficient information to make considered assessments of a client's legitimacy under a RBA, it is possible that criminals will seek to use such ancillary services, in addition to legal services, to minimize the number of advisors and third parties who have access to the client's financial and organizational details. Legal professionals should carefully scrutinize to any request to take on additional obligations for a client beyond their primary services and consider the justification of such a request in the totality of the circumstances and its overall legitimacy.

¹¹ Shell company is an incorporated company with no independent operations, significant assets, ongoing business activities, or employees.

Other services that might indicate ML/TF activity

46. Legal professionals possess a range of specialised legal skills that may be of interest to criminals, in order to enable them to transfer value obtained from criminal activity between parties and obscure ownership. These specialised skills include the creation of financial instruments and arrangements, advice on and drafting of contractual arrangements, and the creation of powers of attorney. In other areas of legal specialisation, such as probate (succession) and insolvency or bankruptcy work, the legal professional may simply encounter information giving rise to a suspicion that the deceased or insolvent individual previously engaged in criminal activity or that parties may be hiding assets to avoid payment to legitimate creditors. Countries differ on how unexpected funds are treated in relation to probate or insolvency cases, in some, a threshold report will be made and the government becomes a super-creditor able to recover the money before any other beneficiary or creditor. Where these circumstances involve legal professionals engaging in a specified activity, legal professionals must carefully consider their AML/CFT obligations. Legal professionals should also consider the ML/TF risk in such circumstances.

1.4.3. Services performed by notaries

Overseeing the purchase of shares or other participations

47. Notaries are often involved in reviewing the documentation for the transfer of shares and/or for transactions that enable participation in a company's equity. It is possible for criminals to use fictitious or misleading accounting methods to distort the apparent value of a company, including by diminishing it in order to hide or obscure transfers of value. Although a notary is generally not responsible for verifying the 'true' value of companies, notaries may encounter information in the course of their duties that is at odds with the presented valuation of a company.

Legitimation of identities of signatory

48. In certain situations, the intervention of a notary is required to legitimise the execution of a private document. Although this technically relates only to verifying the identity of the signing parties, notarisation can often lend an impression of credibility to the content of the document. Criminals may use this form of notarisation service to lend credibility, in particular, to information contained in such documents that asserts the identity of the owners of assets, thereby potentially hiding its true owners.

Legalisation of old documents

49. In certain situations, the intervention of a notary is required for the legalisation of private documents drafted several years before the time of notarisation. The purpose of this service is to provide certainty in relation to the validity of old documents. Criminals may seek to use such services in relation to documents that falsely assert that transactions occurred many years ago, in circumstances that cannot otherwise be verified.

Opening of safe deposit boxes

50. Notaries may be present at the opening of a safe deposit box held at a bank that is opened in the name of a deceased person. This service is to certify the contents of the safe deposit box. Criminals may fraudulently place contents that were not the property of the deceased person in such a deposit box in order to ensure that the title to this property passes in an apparently legitimate and ‘clean’ transfer from the estate of the deceased to the same criminal enterprise as the beneficiaries of the estates.

1.5. FATF Recommendations applicable to the legal professionals

51. The basic intent behind the FATF Recommendations as it relates to legal professionals is consistent with their role as guardians of justice and the rule of law, and professionals subject to ethical obligations, namely to avoid knowingly assisting criminals or facilitating criminal activity. R.22 mandates that the requirements for CDD, record-keeping, PEPs, new technologies and reliance on third parties set out in R. 10, 11, 12, 15 and 17 apply to legal professionals in certain circumstances. R.22 applies to legal professionals when they prepare for and carry out certain specified activities (see paragraph 12). Unless legal advice and representation consist of preparing for or carrying out one or more of these specified activities, legal professionals are not subject to the FATF Recommendations. This Guidance has been prepared to assist in situations where legal professionals prepare for and carry out transactions for the clients concerning the specified activities set out in paragraph 12. For example, FATF Recommendations would not be applicable if a legal professional only provides litigation advice or routine advice at legal aid or other “walk up” clinics.

52. Where more than one legal professional prepares for or carries out a transaction, each legal professional must comply with the applicable CDD, record-keeping and other AML/CFT obligations. Where not all are preparing for or carrying out the transaction, those legal professionals providing advice or services (e.g. an opinion on the applicability of a local law) peripheral to the transaction need not be subject to the AML/CFT obligations.

53. R.23 requires that measures set out in R.18 (Internal controls and foreign branches and subsidiaries), 19 (Higher-risk countries), 20 (reporting of suspicious transactions) and 21(tipping-off and confidentiality) should apply to legal professionals subject to certain qualifications.

54. R.23 applies to legal professionals when they engage in a financial transaction on behalf of a client, in relation to the specified activities under R.22. In case of any suspicions regarding ML/TF, legal professionals should be required to promptly report their suspicions to the FIU. Subject to certain limitations, legal professionals are not required to report their suspicions if the relevant information was obtained in circumstances where they are subject to professional secrecy or legal professional privilege, as recognised by INR.23. The lawyer-client relationship is protected in many countries, including in some instances by constitutional provisions.

55. The FATF Recommendations do not have direct application and are implemented in accordance with the fundamental principles of each jurisdiction's domestic law. In general terms jurisdictions have closely followed the FATF Recommendations but differences do exist and legal professionals need to carefully consider these differences in their own jurisdictions. The overarching concept of the obligations only applying to certain specified activities is common across all jurisdictions. Section III provides further guidance on the application of obligations in R.22 and R.23 to legal professionals.

56. Even though individual legal professionals or law firms may be able to conclude that specific AML/CFT obligations do not apply to them, ethical standards require them to ensure that their services are not being misused, including by criminals, and they should carefully consider what they need to do to guard against that risk.

57. Countries should identify the most appropriate regime, tailored to address relevant ML/TF risks, which takes into consideration the activities and applicable code of conduct for legal professionals.

1.6. Application of this Guidance

58. Many aspects of this Guidance on applying a RBA to AML/CFT may also apply in the context of predicate offences, particularly for other financial crimes such as tax crimes. The ability to apply a RBA effectively to relevant predicate offences will also reinforce the AML/CFT obligations. Legal professionals may also have specific obligations in respect of identifying risks of predicate offences such as tax crimes, and supervisors may have a role to play in oversight and enforcement of those crimes. Therefore, in addition to this Guidance, legal professionals and supervisors should have regard to other sources of guidance that may be relevant in managing the risks of predicate offences.¹³

2. Section II- The RBA to AML/CFT

2.1. What is the RBA?

59. The RBA to AML/CFT means that countries, competent authorities and DNFBPs, including legal professionals, notaries and other legal professionals should identify, assess and understand the ML/TF risks to which they are exposed and take reasonable and proportionate AML/CFT measures effectively and efficiently to mitigate and manage the risks.

60. For legal professionals, identifying and maintaining an understanding of the ML/TF risk faced by the sector as well as specific to its services, its client base, the jurisdictions where it operates, and the effectiveness of its controls in place, will require the investment of resources and training. For supervisors, this will also require maintaining an understanding of the ML/TF risks specific to their area of supervision and the degree to which AML/CFT measures can reasonably be expected to mitigate such risks.

¹³ For example, legal professionals may be subject to mandatory disclosure rules, requiring them to report arrangements that have the hallmarks of tax evasion to the tax authority. Legal professionals may also commit an offence where they facilitate the commission of tax evasion. These initiatives require legal professionals and supervisors to take many of the steps outlined in this Guidance to ensure they fulfil their obligations under applicable law.

61. The RBA is not a “zero failure” approach; there may be occasions where a legal professional has taken reasonable and proportionate AML/CFT measures to identify and mitigate risks, but is still used for ML/TF in isolated instances. Although there are limits to any RBA, ML/TF is a real and serious problem that legal professionals must address so that they do not, unwittingly or otherwise, encourage or facilitate it.

2.2. The rationale for the RBA

62. In 2012, the FATF updated its Recommendations to keep pace with evolving risk and strengthen global safeguards. Its purposes remain to protect the integrity of the financial system by providing governments with updated tools needed to take action against financial crime.

63. There was an increased emphasis on the RBA to AML/CFT, especially in preventive measures and supervision. Though the 2003 Recommendations provided for the application of a RBA in some areas, the 2012 Recommendations considered the RBA to be an essential foundation of a country’s AML/CFT framework.¹⁴

64. The RBA allows countries, within the framework of the FATF Recommendations, to adopt a more tailored set of measures in order to target their resources more effectively and efficiently and apply preventive measures that are reasonable and proportionate to the nature of risks.

65. The application of a RBA is therefore essential for the effective implementation of the FATF Standards by countries and legal professionals.¹⁵

2.3. Application of the RBA

66. The FATF Standards do not predetermine any sector as higher risk. The standards identify sectors that may be vulnerable to ML/TF. The overall risk should be determined through an assessment of the sector at a national level. Different entities within a sector will pose higher or lower risk depending on a variety of factors, including products, services, customers, geography, preventive measures and the strength of the entity’s compliance program.

67. R.1 sets out the scope of application of the RBA as follows:

- a) Who should be subject to a country’s AML/CFT regime? In addition to the sectors and activities already included in the scope of the FATF Recommendations¹⁶, countries should extend their regime to additional institutions, sectors or activities if

¹⁵ The effectiveness of risk-based prevention and mitigation measures will be assessed as part of the mutual evaluation of the national AML/CFT regime. The effectiveness assessment will measure the extent to which a country achieves a defined set of outcomes that are central to a robust AML/CFT system and will analyse the extent to which a country’s legal and institutional framework is producing the expected results. Assessors will need to take into account the risks and the flexibility allowed by the RBA, when determining whether there are deficiencies in a country’s AML/CFT measures, and their importance (FATF, 2013f).

¹⁶ See FATF Glossary, definitions of “Designated non-financial businesses and professions” and “Financial institutions”.

they pose a higher ML/TF risk. Countries could also consider exempting certain institutions, sectors or activities from some AML/CFT obligations where specified conditions are met, such as proven low risk of ML/TF and in strictly limited and justified circumstances.¹⁷

- b) How should those subject to the AML/CFT regime be supervised or monitored for compliance with this regime? Supervisors should ensure that legal professionals are implementing their obligations under R.1. AML/CFT supervisors should consider a legal professional's own risk assessment and mitigation and acknowledge the degree of discretion allowed under the national RBA.
- c) How should those subject to the AML/CFT regime be required to comply? The general principle of a RBA is that, where there are higher risks, enhanced measures should be taken to manage and mitigate those risks. The range, degree, frequency or intensity of preventive measures and controls conducted should be stronger in higher risk scenarios. Legal professionals are required to apply each of the following CDD measures¹⁸: (i) identification and verification of the client's identity; (ii) identification of the beneficial owner and taking reasonable measures to verify the identity of beneficial owner; (iii) understanding the purpose of the business relationship; and (iv) on-going due diligence on the relationship. However, where the ML/TF risk is assessed as lower, the degree, frequency and/or the intensity of the controls conducted will be relatively lighter. Where risk is assessed at a standard level, the standard AML/CFT controls should apply.
- d) Consideration of the engagement in client relationships: Legal professionals are not obliged to avoid risk entirely. Even if the services they provide to their clients are considered vulnerable to ML/TF risks based on risk assessment, it does not mean that all legal professionals and all their clients or services pose a higher risk when taking into account the risk mitigating measures that have been put in place.
- e) Importance of legal professional services to overall economy: Legal professionals often play significant roles in the legal and economic life of a country. The role of legal professionals in supporting the negotiation of business and other agreements is vital. The risks associated with any type of client group are not static and the expectation is that within a client group, based on a variety of factors, individual clients could also be classified into risk categories, such as low, medium or high risk (see section 3.1 below for a detailed description). Measures to mitigate risk should be applied accordingly.

2.4. Challenges

68. Implementing a RBA can present a number of challenges for legal professionals. A RBA requires resources and expertise, both at a country and sector level, to gather and interpret information on risks, to develop policies and procedures and to train personnel. A RBA is also reliant on individuals exercising sound and well-trained judgement when designing and implementing such policies and procedures.

Box 1. Particular RBA challenges for legal professionals, notaries and other legal professionals

¹⁷ See INR.1.

¹⁸ See R.10

Culture of compliance and adequate resources. Implementing a RBA requires that legal professionals, including notaries, have a sound understanding of the ML/TF risks and are able to exercise judgement. Above all, legal professionals and the leadership of law firms must recognise the importance of a culture of compliance across the organisation and ensure sufficient resources are devoted to its implementation appropriate to the size, scale and activities of the organisation. This requires the building of expertise including, for example, through training, recruitment, taking professional advice and ‘learning by doing’. It also requires the allocation of necessary resources to gather and interpret information on ML/TF risks, both at the country and institutional levels, and to develop procedures and systems, including ensuring effective decision-making. The process will always benefit from information sharing by relevant competent authorities, supervisors and SRBs. The provision of good practice guidance by competent authorities, supervisors and SRBs is valuable and encouraged.

Significant variation in services and clients. Legal professionals, including notaries, will vary substantially in the breadth and nature of services provided and the clientele they serve, as well as the size, focus, geographic reach and sophistication of the firm and its employees. In implementing the RBA, legal professionals, including notaries should make reasonable judgements for their particular services and activities. This may mean that no two legal professionals and no two firms are likely to adopt the same detailed practices. Legal professionals, including notaries, should thus individualise and tailor their RBA based on their unique characteristics and practice profile.

Appropriate mitigation measures will also depend on the nature of the legal professional’s role and involvement. Circumstances may vary considerably between professionals who represent clients directly and those who are engaged for distinct purposes. Where these services involve tax laws and regulations, legal professionals also have additional considerations related to a country or jurisdiction’s permissible means to structure transactions and entities or operations to legally avoid and/or minimise taxes.

Transparency of beneficial ownership on legal persons and arrangements. Legal professionals can be involved in the formation, management, or administration of legal entities and arrangements, though in many countries any legal or natural person may be able to perform these activities. Where legal professionals do play this “gatekeeper” role, they may encounter challenges in keeping current and accurate beneficial ownership information depending upon the nature and activities of their client. Other challenges may arise when on-boarding new clients with minimal economic activity associated with the legal entity and/or its owners, controlling persons, or beneficial owners, established in another jurisdiction. Finally, whether the source is a public registry, another third party source, or the client, there is always potential risk in the correctness of the information, in particular where the underlying information has been provided by the client.¹⁹ Those risks notwithstanding from the outset the legal professional should seek answers from the immediate client in determining beneficial ownership (having first determined that none of the relevant exceptions to ascertaining beneficial ownership apply, e.g., the client is a publicly listed company). The information provided by the client should then be appropriately confirmed by reference to public registers and other third party sources where possible. This may require further and clarifying questions to be put to the immediate client.

¹⁹ For further information legal professionals can refer to the FATF Guidance on Transparency and Beneficial Ownership.

The goal is to ensure that the legal professional is reasonably satisfied about the identity of the beneficial owner. For more practical guidance on beneficial ownership, refer to the guidance in Box 2.

Risk of criminality. Although the implementation of a RBA should not impair a client's right of access to justice, legal professionals and their firms must be alert to ML/TF risks posed by the services they provide to avoid the possibility that they may unwittingly commit or become an accessory to the commission of a substantive offence of ML/TF. There have been examples of unwitting involvement of or negligence on the part of legal professionals or complicit professionals intentionally enabling the laundering of proceeds of crime. Legal professionals and firms must protect themselves from misuse by criminals and terrorists. This may include restricting the method and source of payments (e.g. cash payments above a monetary threshold, unexplained third party payments) for the services being provided, dictating greater focus on monitoring and reporting of clients and their funds for unusual or suspicious activity.

Interplay between the requirement to comply with AML/CFT obligations and the principle of legal professional privilege and professional secrecy as applicable. Where legal professional privilege does apply, many countries provide exceptions in law that allow legal professionals to make disclosures of suspicion of ML/TF without incurring penalties or liability or breaching ethical obligations and in others to provide an exception to disclosure if the information is directly encompassed by a legitimate claim of privilege. However, legal professionals may be cautious of making disclosures that would otherwise breach privilege or confidentiality rules due to uncertainties in the application of these exceptions, lack of adequate information or training in relation to these rules, the complexities of their clients' situations or a combination of these factors. Criminals may misperceive that legal professional privilege and professional secrecy will delay, obstruct or prevent investigation or prosecution by authorities if they utilise the services of a legal professional.

2.5. Allocating responsibility under a RBA

69. An effective risk-based regime builds on and reflects a country's legal and regulatory approach, the nature, diversity and maturity of its financial sector and its risk profile. Legal professional should identify and assess their own ML/TF risk taking account of the NRAs in line with R.1, as well as the national legal and regulatory framework, including any areas of prescribed significant risk and mitigation measures. Legal professionals are required to take appropriate steps to identify and assess their ML/TF risks and have policies, controls and procedures that enable them to manage and mitigate effectively the risks that have been identified.²⁰ Where ML/TF risks are higher, legal professionals should always apply enhanced CDD, although national law or regulation might not prescribe exactly how these higher risks are to be mitigated (e.g. varying the degree of enhanced ongoing monitoring).

70. Strategies adopted by legal professionals to mitigate ML/TF risks should take into account the applicable national legal, regulatory and supervisory frameworks. When deciding the extent to which legal professionals can take measures to mitigate risk, countries should consider the ability of the sector to effectively identify and manage ML/TF risks as well as the expertise and resources of their supervisors to adequately supervise and take action to address any failures. Countries may also consider evidence from competent authorities on the level of compliance in the sector, and the sector's approach to dealing with ML/TF risk. Countries whose services sectors are emerging or whose legal and supervisory frameworks are still developing may determine that legal professionals are not equipped to effectively identify and manage ML/TF risk. In such cases, a more prescriptive implementation of the AML/CFT requirements may be appropriate until the understanding and experience of the sector is strengthened.²¹

71. Legal professionals should not be exempted from AML/CFT supervision even where their capacity and compliance is good. However, the RBA allows competent authorities to focus more supervisory resources on higher risk entities.

2.6. Identifying ML/TF risk

72. Access to accurate, timely and objective information on ML/TF risks is essential for an effective RBA. INR.1.3 requires countries to have mechanisms to provide appropriate information on the results of the risk assessments to all relevant competent authorities, financial institutions and legal professionals. Where information is not readily available, for example where competent authorities have inadequate data to assess risks, are unable to share relevant information on ML/TF risks and threats, or where access to information is restricted by censorship or data protection provisions, it will be difficult for legal professionals to correctly identify ML/TF risk.

73. R.34 requires competent authorities, supervisors and SRBs to establish guidelines and provide feedback to financial institutions and DNFBPs. Such guidelines and feedback help institutions and businesses to assess the ML/TF risks and to adjust their risk mitigating programmes accordingly.

2.7. Assessing ML/TF risk

74. Assessing ML/TF risk requires countries, competent authorities and legal professionals to determine how the ML/TF threats identified will affect them. They should analyse the information to understand the likelihood of these risks occurring, and the impact that these would have, on the individual legal professionals, the entire sector and on the national economy. ML/TF risks are often classified as low, medium and high, with possible combinations between the different categories (e.g. medium-high, low-medium). Assessing ML/TF risk goes beyond the mere gathering of quantitative and qualitative information, without its proper analysis; this information forms the basis for effective ML/TF risk mitigation and should be kept up-to-date to remain relevant.²²

²¹ This could be based on a combination of elements described in Section II, as well as objective criteria such as mutual evaluation reports, follow-up reports or Financial Sector Assessment Program (FSAP) evaluations.

²² FATF (2013a), paragraph 10. See also Section I D for further detail on identifying and assessing ML/TF risk. Also refer to The FATF Guidance on National Money Laundering and Terrorist Financing Risk Assessment (February 2013).

75. Competent authorities should employ skilled and trusted personnel, recruited through fit and proper tests, where appropriate. They should be technically equipped commensurate with the complexity of their responsibilities. Law firms that are required to routinely conduct a high volume of enquiries when on-boarding clients, e.g., because of the size and geographic footprint of the firm, may also consider engaging skilled and trusted personnel who are appropriately recruited and checked. Such law firms are also likely to consider using the various technological options (including artificial intelligence) and software programs that are now available to assist law firms in this regard.

76. Law firms should develop internal policies, procedures and controls, including appropriate compliance management arrangements, and adequate screening procedures to ensure high standards when hiring employees. Law firms should also develop an ongoing employee training programme. They should be trained commensurate with the complexity of their responsibilities.

2.8. Mitigating and managing ML/TF risk

77. Under a RBA, legal professionals should appropriately mitigate and manage the risks that they identify. Mitigating practices will invariably include initial and ongoing CDD, internal policies, training, and procedures to address the vulnerabilities faced in the legal professional's particular context. This section does not attempt to exhaustively list the mitigating practices that may be employed by legal professionals. Instead, it provides select examples to illustrate how legal professionals might choose to address particular risks under the RBA.²³

78. The FATF Recommendations require that, when applying a RBA, legal professionals, countries, competent authorities and SRBs decide on the most appropriate and effective way to mitigate the ML/TF risk they have identified. They should take enhanced measures to manage and mitigate situations when the ML/TF risk is higher. In lower risk situations, less stringent measures may be applied.²⁴

- a) Countries looking to exempt certain legal professionals, sectors or activities from some of their AML/CFT obligations should assess the ML/TF risk associated with these legal professionals, activities and sectors and be able to demonstrate that the ML/TF risk is low, and that the specific conditions required for one of the exemptions of INR 1.6 are met. The depth and scope of the risk assessment will depend on the type of business or profession, sector or activity, product or services offered and the geographic scope of the activities that stands to benefit from the exemption.
- b) Countries and legal professionals looking to apply simplified measures should conduct an assessment to ascertain the lower risk connected to the category of clients or services, establish a threshold for the lower level of the risks involved, and define the extent and the intensity of the required AML/CFT measures. Specific ²³ For information on ways in which legal professionals might mitigate their ML/TF vulnerabilities, see Section 2 of this Guidance and chapters III and IV of the separate publication: "A Lawyer's Guide to Detecting and Preventing Money Laundering" published in October 2014 by a collaboration of the International Bar Association, American Bar Association and the Council of Bars and Law Societies of Europe.

²⁴ Subject to the national legal framework providing for Simplified CDD.

Recommendations set out in more detail how this general principle applies to particular requirements.²⁵

2.9. Developing a common understanding of the RBA

79. The effectiveness of a RBA depends on a common understanding by competent authorities and legal professionals of what the RBA entails, how it should be applied and how ML/TF risks should be addressed. In addition to a legal and regulatory framework that spells out the degree of discretion, legal professionals should deal with the risks they identify. Competent authorities should issue risk-based approach guidance to legal professionals on meeting and managing their legal and regulatory AML/CFT obligations. Supporting ongoing and effective communication between competent authorities and legal professionals is essential.

80. Competent authorities should acknowledge that not all legal professionals will adopt identical AML/CFT controls in a risk-based regime. On the other hand, legal professionals should understand that a RBA does not exempt them from applying effective AML/CFT controls with a RBA.

3. Section III – Guidance for legal professionals and notaries

3.1. Risk assessment

81. Potential ML/TF risks faced by legal professionals will vary according to many factors including the activities undertaken by them, the type and identity of the client, and the nature and origin of the client relationship. When applying the RBA, legal professionals and firms should bear in mind that specified activities have been found to be more susceptible to ML/TF activities because they involve the movement or management of client assets; this susceptibility may be heightened when these activities are conducted on a cross-border basis. These specified activities include:

- a) the purchase or sale of real estate property;
- b) managing the money, securities and other assets of clients;
- c) opening or managing bank, savings or securities accounts;
- d) organisation of contributions for the creation, operation or management of companies; and
- e) creating, operating or management of legal persons or arrangements and buying and selling of business entities.

82. Although a client's right of access to advice and justice should not be adversely affected by the implementation of the RBA, legal professionals and their firms must remain alert to ML/TF risks posed by the services they provide to avoid unwittingly committing or becoming an accessory to the commission of a ML/TF offence. Legal professionals and law firms must protect themselves from unwitting involvement in ML/TF; such involvement not only presents reputational risk to the individuals concerned, the law firm and the legal profession at large, it is also unacceptable for the legal profession to allow itself to be misused by criminals.

²⁵ For example, R.22 on CDD.

83. Legal professionals should perform a risk assessment of the client at the inception of a client relationship. Such risk assessment may well be informed by findings of the NRA, the supra-national risk assessments, sectoral reports conducted by competent authorities on ML/TF risks that are inherent in legal services/sector, risk reports in other jurisdictions where the legal professional is based, and any other information which may be relevant to assess the risk level particular to their legal practice. For example, press articles and other widely available public information highlighting issues that may have arisen in particular jurisdictions. Legal professionals may well also draw references to FATF Guidance on indicators and risk factors²⁶. During the course of a client relationship, procedures for ongoing monitoring and review of the client/transactional risk profile are also important. Competent authorities should consider how they can best alert legal professionals to the findings of any national risk assessments, the supra-national risk assessments and any other information that may be relevant to assess the risk level particular to a legal practice in the relevant country.

84. The ongoing nature of the advice and services a legal professional typically provides means that automated transaction monitoring systems of the type used by financial institutions will not be appropriate as the exclusive solution for most legal professionals. The legal professional's knowledge of the client and its business will develop throughout the duration of what typically would be expected to be a longer term and interactive professional relationship (in some cases, such relationships may exist for short term clients as well, e.g. for property transactions). Although the individual legal professionals are not expected to investigate their clients, they may be well positioned to identify and detect changes in the type of work or the nature of the client's activities. Legal professionals will also need to consider the nature of the risks presented by isolated, minor and short-term client relationships that may inherently, but not necessarily be low risk (e.g. one-off client relationship involving simple transactions)).

85. Identification of the ML/TF risks associated with certain clients or categories of clients, and certain types of work will allow legal professionals to determine and implement reasonable and proportionate measures and controls to mitigate such risks. The risks and appropriate measures will depend on the nature of the legal professional's role and involvement. Circumstances may vary considerably between professionals who represent clients in a transaction or in a long term advisory relationship and those who are engaged for distinct and discrete purposes including, for example, civil law notaries and local counsel engaged in a specific jurisdiction within a transaction.

86. The amount and degree of ongoing monitoring and review will depend on the nature and frequency of the relationship, along with the comprehensive assessment of client/transactional risk. A legal professional may also have to adjust the risk assessment of a particular client based upon information received from a designated competent authority, SRB or other credible sources (including a referring legal professional).

87. Legal professionals may assess ML/TF risks by applying various categories. This provides a strategy for managing potential risks by enabling legal professionals, where required, to subject each client to reasonable and proportionate risk assessment.

88. The most commonly used risk criteria are:

- a) country or geographic risk;
- b) client risk; and

²⁶ FATF Report on Vulnerabilities in the Legal Sector (2013), Chapters 4 and 5.

- c) risk associated with the particular service offered.

89. The weight given to these risk categories (individually or in combination) in assessing the overall risk of potential ML/TF may vary given the size, sophistication, nature and scope of services provided by the legal professional and/or law firm. These criteria, however, should be considered holistically and not in isolation. Legal professionals, based on their individual practices and reasonable judgements, will need to independently assess the weight to be given to each risk factor.

90. Although there is no universally accepted set of risk categories, the examples provided in this Guidance are the most commonly identified risk categories. There is no single methodology to apply these risk categories and the application of these risk categories is intended to provide a suggested framework for approaching the assessment and management of potential ML/TF risks. For smaller law firms and sole practitioners, it is advisable to look at the services they offer (e.g. carrying out company management services may entail greater risk than other services).

91. Criminals deploy a range of techniques and mechanisms to obscure the beneficial ownership of assets and transactions. Many of the common mechanisms/techniques have been compiled by FATF in the previous studies, including the 2014 FATF Guidance on Transparency and Beneficial Ownership and the 2018 Joint FATF and Egmont Group Report on Concealment of Beneficial Ownership. Legal professionals may refer to the studies for more details on the use of obscuring techniques and relevant case studies.

92. A practical starting point for law firms (especially smaller firms) and legal professionals (especially sole practitioners) would be to take the following approach to every transaction; many of these elements are critical to satisfying other obligations owed to clients, such as fiduciary duties, and as part of their general regulatory obligations:

- a) Know your client: identify the client and its beneficial owners and the true “beneficiaries” of the transaction. Obtain an understanding of the source of funds and source of wealth of the client where required, its owners and the purpose of the transaction.
- b) Understand the nature of the work: legal professionals must know the exact nature of the service that they are providing and have an understanding of how that work could facilitate the movement or obscuring of the proceeds of crime. Where a legal professional does not have the requisite expertise, the legal professional should not undertake the work.
- c) Understand the commercial or personal rationale for the work: legal professionals need to be reasonably satisfied that there is a commercial or personal rationale for the work undertaken. Legal professionals however are not obliged to objectively assess the commercial or personal rationale if it appears reasonable and genuine.
- d) Be attentive to red flag indicators: exercise vigilance in identifying and then carefully reviewing aspects of the transaction if there are reasonable grounds to suspect that funds are the proceeds of a criminal activity, or related to terrorist financing. Documenting the thought process may be a viable option to assist in interpreting red flags/indicators of suspicion.
- e) Then consider what action, if any, needs to be taken and have an action plan. The outcomes of the above action (i.e. the comprehensive risk assessment of a particular client/transaction) will dictate the level and nature of the evidence/documentation collated under a firm's CDD/EDD procedures (including evidence of source of wealth or funds).

- f) Legal professionals should adequately document and record steps taken under a) to e).

3.1.1. Country/Geographic risk

93. There is no universally agreed definition by competent authorities, SRBs or legal professionals that prescribes whether a particular country or geographic area (including the country within which the legal professional practices) represents a higher risk. Country risk, in conjunction with other risk factors, provides useful information on ML/TF risks. Geographic risks of ML/TF may arise in a variety of circumstances, including from the domicile of the client, the location of the transaction or the source of the wealth or funds. Factors that are generally agreed to place a country in a higher risk category include:

- a) Countries/areas identified by credible sources²⁷ as providing funding or support for terrorist activities or that have designated terrorist organisations operating within them.
- b) Countries identified by credible sources as having significant levels of organised crime, corruption, or other criminal activity, including source or transit countries for illegal drugs, human trafficking and smuggling and illegal gambling.
- c) Countries subject to sanctions, embargoes or similar measures issued by international organisations such as the United Nations.
- d) Countries identified by credible sources as having weak governance, law enforcement, and regulatory regimes, including countries identified by FATF statements as having weak AML/CFT regimes, and for which financial institutions (as well as DNFBPs) should give special attention to business relationships and transactions.
- e) Countries identified by credible sources to be uncooperative in providing beneficial ownership information, a determination of which may be established from reviewing FATF mutual evaluation reports or reports by organisations that also consider various co-operation levels such as the OECD Global Forum reports on compliance with international tax transparency standards.
- f) Countries that permit the use of nominee shareholders and bearer shares, thereby allowing the obfuscation of beneficial ownership.

3.1.2. Client risk

94. Determining the potential ML/TF risks posed by a client or category of clients is critical to the development and implementation of an overall risk-based framework. Based on their own criteria, law firms and legal professionals should seek to determine whether a particular client poses a higher risk and the potential impact of any mitigating factors on ²⁷ "Credible sources" refers to information that is produced by reputable and universally recognised international organisations and other bodies that make such information publicly and widely available. In addition to the FATF and FATF-style regional bodies, such sources may include, but are not limited to, supra-national or international bodies such as the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank and the Egmont Group of Financial Intelligence Units.

that assessment. Application of risk variables may mitigate or exacerbate the risk assessment. Categories of clients whose activities may indicate a higher risk include:

- a) PEPs and persons closely associated with or related to PEPs, are considered as higher risk clients (Please refer to the FATF Guidance (2013) on PEPs for further guidance on how to identify PEPs).

Box 2. Particular considerations for PEPs and source of funds and wealth

If a legal professional is advising a PEP client, or where a PEP is the beneficial owner of assets in a transaction, appropriate enhanced CDD is required if a specified activity under R.22 is involved. Such measures include, obtaining senior management (e.g. senior partner, managing partner or executive partner) approval before establishing a business relationship, taking reasonable measures to establish the source of wealth and source of funds of customers and beneficial owners identified as PEPs, and conducting enhanced ongoing monitoring on that relationship.

The source of funds and the source of wealth are relevant to determining a client's risk profile. The source of funds is the activity that generates the funds for a client (e.g. salary, trading revenues, or payments out of a trust). Source of funds relates directly to the economic origin of funds to be used in a transaction. This is likely to be received via a bank account. Generally, this would be evidenced by bank statements or similar documentation showing from where funds in an account originated such as receipt of salary. Source of wealth describes the activities that have generated the total net worth of a client (e.g. ownership of a business, inheritance, or investments). Source of wealth is the origin of the accrued body of wealth of an individual. Understanding source of wealth is about taking reasonable steps, commensurate with risk to satisfy that the funds to be used in a transaction appear to come from a legitimate source.

While source of funds and wealth may be the same for some clients, they may be partially or entirely different for other clients. For example, a PEP who receives a modest official salary, but who has substantial funds, without any apparent business interests or inheritance, might raise suspicions of bribery, corruption or misuse of position. Under the RBA, legal professionals should satisfy themselves that adequate information is available to assess a client's source of funds and source of wealth as legitimate with a degree of certainty that is reasonable and proportionate to the risk profile of the client.

Relevant factors that influence the extent and nature of CDD include the particular circumstances of a PEP, whether the PEP has access to official funds, makes decisions regarding the allocation of public funds or public procurement contracts, the PEP's home country, the type of activity the PEP is instructing the legal professional to perform or carry out, whether the PEP is domestic or international, particularly having regard to the services asked for, and the scrutiny to which the PEP is under in the PEP's home country.

If a PEP is otherwise involved with a client, then the nature of the risk should be considered in light of all relevant circumstances, such as:

- a) the nature of the relationship between the client and the PEP: If the client is a trust, company or legal entity, even if the PEP is not a natural person exercising effective control or the PEP is merely a discretionary beneficiary who has not received any distributions, the PEP may nonetheless affect the risk assessment.

b) the nature of the client (e.g. where it is a public listed company or regulated entity who is subject to and regulated for a full range of AML/CFT requirements consistent with FATF Recommendations, the fact that it is subject to reporting obligations will be a relevant factor, albeit this should not automatically qualify the client for simplified CDD).

c) the nature of the services sought. For example, lower risks may exist where a PEP is not the client but a director of a client that is a public listed company or regulated entity and the client is purchasing property for adequate consideration. Higher risks may exist where a legal professional is involved in the movement or transfer of funds/assets, or the purchase of high value property or assets.

b) Clients conducting their business relationship or requesting services in unusual or unconventional circumstances (as evaluated in all the circumstances of the representation).

c) Clients where the structure or nature of the entity or relationship makes it difficult to identify in a timely manner the true beneficial owner or controlling interests or clients attempting to obscure understanding of their business, ownership or the nature of their transactions, such as:

i. Unexplained use of shell and shelf companies, front company, legal entities with ownership through nominee shares or bearer shares, control through nominee and corporate directors, legal persons or legal arrangements, splitting company incorporation and asset administration over different countries, all without any apparent legal or legitimate tax, business, economic or other reason.

ii. Unexplained use of informal arrangements such as family or close associates acting as nominee shareholders or directors.

iii. Unusual complexity in control or ownership structures without a clear explanation.

d) Client companies that operate a considerable part of their business in or have major subsidiaries in countries that may pose higher geographic risk.

e) Clients that are cash (and/or cash equivalent) intensive businesses. These may include, for example:

i. Money or Value Transfer Services (MVTs) businesses (e.g. remittance houses, currency exchange houses, casas de cambio, centros cambiarios, remisores de fondos, bureaux de change, money transfer agents and bank note traders or other businesses offering money transfer facilities). Where such clients (e.g. MVTs providers) are themselves subject to and regulated for a full range of AML/CFT requirements consistent with the FATF Recommendations, this will aid to mitigate the risks.

ii. Operators, brokers and others providing services in virtual assets.

iii. Casinos, betting houses and other gambling related institutions and activities.

f) Businesses that while not normally cash intensive appear to have substantial amounts of cash.

- g) Businesses that rely heavily on new technologies (e.g. online trading platform) may have inherent vulnerabilities to exploitation by criminals, especially those not regulated for AML/CFT.
 - h) Charities and other “not for profit” organisations (NPOs) that are not subject to monitoring or supervision (especially those operating on a “cross-border” basis) on a RBA by designated competent authorities²⁸ or SRBs.
 - i) Clients using financial intermediaries, financial institutions or legal professionals that are not subject to adequate AML/CFT laws and measures and that are not adequately supervised by competent authorities or SRBs.
 - j) Clients who appear to be acting on somebody else’s instructions without disclosing the identity of such person.
 - k) Clients who appear to actively and inexplicably avoid face-to-face meetings or who provide instructions intermittently without legitimate reasons and are otherwise evasive or very difficult to reach, when this would normally be expected.
 - l) Clients who request that transactions be completed in unusually tight or accelerated timeframes without a reasonable explanation for accelerating the transaction, which would make it difficult or impossible for the legal professionals to perform a proper risk assessment.
 - m) Clients having convictions for proceeds generating crimes who instruct the legal professional (who has actual knowledge of such convictions) to undertake specified activities on their behalf.
 - n) Clients who have no address, or who have multiple addresses without legitimate reasons.
 - o) Clients who have funds that are obviously and inexplicably disproportionate to their circumstances (e.g. their age, income, occupation or wealth).
 - p) Clients who change their settlement or execution instructions without appropriate explanation.
 - q) Clients who change their means of payment for a transaction at the last minute and without justification (or with suspect justification), or where there is an unexplained lack of information or transparency in the transaction. This risk extends to situations where last minute changes are made to enable funds to be paid in from/out to a third party.
 - r) Clients who insist, without reasonable explanation, that transactions be effected exclusively or mainly through the use of virtual assets for the purpose of preserving their anonymity.
 - s) Clients who offer to pay unusually high levels of fees for services that would not ordinarily warrant such a premium. However, bona fide and appropriate contingency fee arrangements, where a legal professional may receive a significant premium for a successful representation, should not be considered a risk factor.

²⁸ R.8 provides that countries should protect NPOs from terrorist financing abuse; this may significantly reduce the risk profile of such organisations where the legal professional can verify NPOs are subject to appropriate oversight and protection.

- t) Unusually high levels of assets or unusually large transactions compared to what might reasonably be expected of clients with a similar profile may indicate that a client not otherwise seen as higher risk should be treated as such. Conversely, low levels of assets or low value transactions involving a client that would otherwise appear to be higher risk might allow for a legal professional to treat the client as lower risk.
- u) Certain transactions, structures, geographical location, international activities or other factors that are not consistent with the legal professional's understanding of the client's business or economic situation.
- v) The legal professional's client base includes industries or sectors where opportunities for ML/TF are particularly prevalent²⁹.
- w) Clients who apply for residence rights or citizenship in a jurisdiction in exchange for capital transfers, purchase of property or government bonds, or investment in corporate entities in that jurisdiction.
- x) Clients who are suspected to be engaged in falsifying activities through the use of false loans, false invoices, and misleading naming conventions.
- y) The relationship between employee numbers/structure and nature of the business is divergent from the industry norm (e.g. the turnover of a company is unreasonably high considering the number of employees and assets compared to similar businesses).
- z) Client seeking advice or implementation of an arrangement that has indicators of a tax evasion purpose, whether identified as the client's express purpose, in connection with a known tax evasion scheme or based on other indicators from the nature of the transaction.
- aa) The transfer of the seat of a company to another jurisdiction without any genuine economic activity in the country of destination poses a risk of creation of shell companies that might be used to obscure beneficial ownership.
- bb) Sudden activity from a previously dormant client without clear explanation.
- cc) Client starts or develops an enterprise with unexpected profile or abnormal business cycles or client is entrant into new/emerging markets. Organised criminality generally does not have to raise capital/debt, often making them first into a new market, especially where this market may be retail/cash intensive. Indicators that client does not wish to obtain necessary governmental approvals/filings.
- dd) Reason for client choosing the firm is unclear, given the firm's size, location or specialisation.
- ee) Frequent or unexplained change of professional adviser(s) or members of management.
- ff) The client is reluctant to provide all the relevant information or legal professionals have reasonable doubt that the provided information is correct or sufficient.

²⁹ See the FATF Report on Money Laundering and Terrorist Financing: Vulnerabilities of Legal Professionals (June 2013).

3.1.3. Transaction/Service risk

95. An overall risk assessment of a client should also include determining the potential risks presented by the services offered by a legal professional, given the nature of such services, noting that legal professionals provide a broad and diverse range of services. The context of the services being offered or delivered is always fundamental to a RBA. Any one of the factors discussed in this Guidance alone may not itself constitute a high-risk circumstance but the factors should be considered cumulatively and holistically. When determining the risks associated with the provision of services related to specified activities, consideration and appropriate weight should be given to such factors as:

- a) Services where legal professionals, effectively acting as financial intermediaries, handle the receipt and transmission of funds through accounts they control in the act of facilitating a business transaction.
- b) Services that allow clients to deposit/transfer funds through the legal professional's trust account that are not tied to a transaction for which the legal professional is performing or carrying out activities specified in R.22.
- c) Services where the client may request financial transactions to occur outside of the legal professional's trust account (the account held by the legal professional for the client) (e.g., through the firm's general account and/or a personal or business account held by the legal professional himself/herself).
- d) Services where legal professionals may in practice represent or assure the client's standing, reputation and credibility to third parties, without a commensurate knowledge of the client's affairs.
- e) Services that improperly conceal beneficial ownership from competent authorities, or that have the effect of improperly concealing beneficial ownership.³⁰
- f) Services requested by the client for which the legal professional does not have expertise excepting where the legal professional is referring the request to an appropriately trained professional for advice.
- g) Services that rely heavily on new technologies (e.g. online trading platform) that may have inherent vulnerabilities to exploitation by criminals.
- h) Transfer of real estate or other high value goods or assets between parties in a time period that is unusually short for similar transactions with no apparent legal, tax, business, economic or other legitimate reason.³¹
- i) Payments received from un-associated or unknown third parties and payments in cash where this would not be a typical method of payment.

³⁰ For further details on the difficulties presented by arrangements which conceal beneficial ownership see joint FATF and Egmont group report "Vulnerabilities Linked to the Concealment of Beneficial Ownership" published in July 2018.

³¹ See the FATF Typologies report Money Laundering and Terrorist Financing through the Real Estate Sector at <http://www.fatf-gafi.org/dataoecd/45/31/40705101.pdf>.

- j) Transactions where it is readily apparent to the legal professional that there is inadequate consideration, especially where the client does not identify legitimate reasons for the amount of the consideration.
- k) Administrative arrangements concerning estates where the deceased was known to the legal professional as being a person who had been convicted of proceeds generating crimes.
- l) The use of shell companies, companies with ownership through nominee shares or bearer shares and control through nominee and corporate directors without apparent legal, tax, business, economic or other legitimate reason.³²
- m) Situations where advice on the setting up of legal arrangements may be misused to obscure ownership or real economic purpose (including changes of name/corporate seat or on establishing complex group structures). This might include advising in relation to a discretionary trust that gives the trustee discretionary power to name a class of beneficiaries that does not include the real beneficiary (e.g. naming a charity as the sole discretionary beneficiary initially with a view to adding the real beneficiaries at a later stage). It might also include situations where a trust is set up for the purpose of managing shares in a company with the intention of making it more difficult to determine the beneficiaries of assets managed by the trust.³³
- n) Services that deliberately have been provided or depend upon more anonymity in the client identity or participants than is normal under the circumstances and experience of the legal professional.
- o) Settlement of default judgments or alternative dispute resolutions is made in an atypical manner (e.g. if satisfaction of a settlement or judgment debt is made too readily).
- p) Use of virtual assets and other anonymous means of payment and wealth transfer within the transaction without apparent legal, tax, business, economic or other legitimate reason.
- q) Transactions using unusual means of payment (e.g. precious metals or stones).
- r) The postponement of a payment for an asset or service delivered immediately to a date far from the moment at which payment would normally be expected to occur, without appropriate assurances that payment will be made.
- s) Unexplained establishment of unusual provisions in credit arrangements that do not reflect the commercial position between the parties. Arrangements that may be abused in this way might include unusually short/long amortisation periods, interest rates materially above/below market rates, or unexplained repeated cancellations of promissory notes/mortgages or other security instruments substantially ahead of the maturity date initially agreed.
- t) Contributions or transfers of goods that are inherently difficult to value (e.g. jewels, precious stones, objects of art or antiques, virtual assets), where this is not common for the type of client, transaction or with the legal professional's normal course of business, such as a transfer to a corporate entity, or generally without any appropriate explanation.

- u) Successive capital or other contributions in a short period of time to the same entity with no apparent legal, tax, business, economic or other legitimate reason.
- v) Acquisitions of businesses in liquidation with no apparent legal, tax, business, economic or other legitimate reason.
- w) Power of representation given in unusual conditions (e.g. when it is granted irrevocably or in relation to specific assets) and the stated reasons for these conditions are unclear or illogical.
- x) Transactions involving closely connected persons and for which the client and/or its financial advisors provide inconsistent or irrational explanations and are subsequently unwilling or unable to explain by reference to legal, tax, business, economic or other legitimate reason.
- y) Legal persons that, as a separate business, offer TCSP services should have regard to the TCSP Guidance,³⁴ even if such legal persons are owned or operated by legal professionals. Legal professionals, however, who offer TCSP services should have regard to this Guidance, and should consider customer or service risks related to TCSPs such as the following:
 - i. Unexplained delegation of authority by the client through the use of powers of attorney, mixed boards and representative offices.
 - ii. Provision of registered office facilities and nominee directorships without proper explanations.
 - iii. Unexplained use of discretionary trusts.
 - iv. In the case of express trusts, an unexplained relationship between a settlor and beneficiaries with a vested right, other beneficiaries and persons who are the object of a power.
- z) In the case of an express trust, an unexplained (where explanation is warranted) nature of classes of beneficiaries and classes within an expression of wishes.
- aa) Services where the legal professional acts as a trustee/director that allows the client's identity to remain anonymous.
- bb) Situations where a nominee is being used (e.g. friend or family member is named as owner of property/assets where it is clear that the family member/friend is receiving instructions from the beneficial owner), with no apparent legal, tax, business, economic or other legitimate reason.
- cc) Unexplained (where explanation is warranted) use of pooled client accounts or safe custody of client money or assets or bearer shares, where allowed.

³⁴ See the FATF Guidance on the Risk-Based Approach for Trust and Company Service Providers, published in July 2018

- dd) Commercial, private, or real property transactions or services to be carried out by the client with no apparent legitimate business, economic, tax, family governance, or legal reasons.
- ee) Suspicion of fraudulent transactions or transactions which are improperly accounted for. These might include:
 - i. Over and under invoicing of goods/services.
 - ii. Multiple invoicing of the same goods/services.
 - iii. Falsely described goods/services
 - iv. Over and under shipments (e.g. false entries on bills of lading).
 - v. Multiple trading of goods/services.

3.2. Variables that may influence risk assessment

96. Due regard must be accorded to the vast and profound differences in the obligations, practices, size, scale and expertise, amongst legal professionals, as well as the nature of the clients they serve. As a result, consideration must be given to these factors when creating a RBA that also complies with the legal professionals existing obligations. Certain notaries, for example, are subject to an array of duties as public officeholders. By contrast, legal professionals do not have such extensive public duties, but are nearly universally subject to duties of professional secrecy and an obligation to uphold their clients' rights of legal professional privilege to their communications. Legal professionals with distinct "public" roles within national legal systems should carefully consider the interaction of their particular duties with the RBA outlined in this Guidance.

97. The particular responsibilities, status and role of the legal professional will, in general, have a very significant influence on what is appropriate for risk assessment. For example, in civil law jurisdictions, notaries do not represent parties to a contract and are not intermediaries. They are obliged to be impartial and independent, advising both parties bearing in mind any disparity of power between them. Notaries carry duties as public office holders. These duties will influence the scope of what the notary must do to assess the ML/TF risk and how to act based on that assessment. Notaries should still be conscious of the respectability they can add to documents, and the value this can add to those whose motives are nefarious.

98. Consideration must also be given to the resources that can be reasonably allocated to implement and manage an appropriately developed RBA. For example, a sole practitioner would not be expected to devote an equivalent level of resources as a large firm; rather, the sole practitioner would be expected to develop appropriate systems and controls and a RBA proportionate to the scope and nature of the practitioner's practice and its clients. Small firms serving predominantly locally based clients cannot generally be expected to devote a significant amount of senior personnel's time to conducting risk assessments other than on those clients with the highest risk profiles. It may be more reasonable for sole practitioners to rely on publicly available records and information supplied by a client for a risk assessment than it would be for a large law firm. However, legal professionals in many jurisdictions and practices are required to conduct both a risk assessment of the general risks of their practice, and of all new clients and current clients engaged in one-off specific transactions. The emphasis must be on following a RBA.

99. A significant factor to consider is whether the client and proposed work would be unusual, risky or suspicious for the particular legal professional. This factor must always be considered in the context of the legal professional's practice, as well as the legal, professional, and ethical obligations in the jurisdiction(s) of practice. A legal professional's RBA methodology may thus take account of risk variables specific to a particular client or type of work. Consistent with the RBA and proportionality, the presence of one or more of these variables may cause a legal professional to conclude that either enhanced CDD and monitoring is warranted, or conversely that standard CDD and monitoring can be reduced, modified or simplified. When reducing, modifying or simplifying, legal professionals should always adhere to the minimum requirements as set out in national legislation. These variables may increase or decrease the perceived risk posed by a particular client or type of work and may include:

- a) The nature of the client relationship and the client's need for the legal professional to provide specified activities.
- b) The level of regulation or other oversight or governance regime to which a client is subject. For example, a client that is a financial institution or legal professional regulated in a country with a satisfactory AML/CFT regime poses less risk of ML/TF than a client in an industry that has ML/TF risks and yet is unregulated for ML/TF purposes.
- c) The reputation and publicly available information about a client. Legal persons that are transparent and well known in the public domain and have operated for a number of years without being convicted of proceed generating crimes may have low susceptibility to money laundering. This may not be the case where such a legal person is in financial distress or in a situation of liquidation/insolvency.
- d) The regularity, depth or duration of the client relationship may be a factor that lowers or heightens risk (dependant on the nature of the relationship).
- e) The familiarity of the legal professional with a country, including knowledge of local laws, regulations and rules, as well as the structure and extent of regulatory oversight, as the result of a legal professional's own activities within the country.
- f) The proportionality between the magnitude or volume and longevity of the client's business and its legal requirements, including the nature of services sought.
- g) Subject to other factors (including the nature of the services and the source and nature of the client relationship), providing limited legal services in the capacity of a local or special counsel may be considered a low risk factor. This may also, in any event, mean that the legal professional is not "preparing for" or "carrying out" a transaction for a specified activity identified in R.22.
- h) Significant and unexplained geographic distance between the legal professional and the location of the client where there is no nexus to the type of activity being undertaken.
- i) Where a prospective client has instructed the legal professional to undertake a single transaction-based service (as opposed to an ongoing advisory relationship) and one or more other risk factors are present.
- j) Where the legal professional knows that a prospective client has used the services of a number of legal professionals for the same type of service over a relatively short period of time.

- k) Risks that may arise from non-face-to-face relationships and could favour anonymity. Due to the prevalence of electronic communication between legal professionals and clients in the delivery of legal services, non-face-to-face interaction between legal professionals and clients would not be considered a high risk factor on its own. The treatment of non-face-to-face communications should always be subject to the approach taken by legislation and regulators in the relevant jurisdiction.
- l) The nature of the referral or origin of the client. A prospective client may contact a legal professional in an unsolicited manner or without common or customary methods of introduction or referrals, which may indicate increased risk. By contrast, where a prospective client has been referred from another trusted source or a source regulated for AML/CFT purposes (e.g. from another legal professional), the referral may be considered a mitigating risk factor.
- m) The structure of a client or transaction. Structures with no apparent legal, tax, business, economic or other legitimate reason may increase risk. Legal professionals often design structures (even if complex) for legitimate legal, tax, business, economic or other legitimate reasons, in which circumstances there may not be an indicator of increased risk of ML/TF. Legal professionals should satisfy themselves of a reasonable need for such complex structures in the context of the transaction.
- n) Trusts that are pensions may be considered lower risk.

3.3. Documentation of risk assessments

100. Several jurisdictions mandate various documentation requirements in connection with AML/CFT.³⁵ The default position is that all risk assessments must be documented. Legal professionals must always understand their ML/TF risks. However, competent authorities or SRBs may determine that individual documented risk assessments are not required, if the specific risks inherent to the sector are clearly identified and understood.³⁶

101. Legal professionals may fail to satisfy their AML/CFT obligations, for example by relying completely on a checklist risk assessment where there are other clear indicators of potential illicit activity. Completing risk assessments in a time efficient yet comprehensive manner has become more important as legal professionals are now obliged in various jurisdictions to conduct a documented risk assessment for each client.

102. A documented risk assessment may cover a range of specific risks by breaking them down into the three common categories highlighted above: (a) geographic risks, (b) client-based risks and (c) service-based risks. These three risk categories have been identified and explained in the guide: “A Lawyer’s Guide to Detecting and Preventing Money Laundering”.³⁷ The guide also provides graphic illustrations and case studies of how to assess risk under these three categories. In practice, risk factors could be categorised differently in different jurisdictions. However, all relevant risk factors should be considered.

³⁵ For example, the European Union law places an obligation on legal professionals working in an AML-regulated service to document risk assessments and ensure they are kept up to date (Article 8 of the Fourth Anti-Money Laundering Directive (EU) 2015/849).

³⁶ Paragraph 8 of INR.1

³⁷ A Lawyer’s Guide to Detecting and Preventing Money Laundering, is a collaborative publication of the International Bar Association, the American Bar Association and the Council of Bars and Law Societies of Europe, published in October 2014.

103. Each of these risks could be assessed using indicators such as low risk, medium risk and/or high risk. A short explanation of the reasons for each attribution should be included and an overall assessment of risk determined. An action plan³⁸ (if required) should then be outlined to accompany the assessment and dated. Action plans can help identify potential red flags, facilitate risk assessment and decide on CDD measures to be applied. In assessing the risk profile of the client at this stage, reference must be made to the relevant targeted financial sanctions lists to confirm neither the client nor the beneficial owner is designated and included in any of them³⁹. A simple template of risk assessment may be as below, for instance:

Geographic risk	Client-based risk	Service-based risk
Low/medium/high risk	Low/medium/high risk	Low/medium/high risk
Explanation	Explanation	Explanation
Overall assessment: Low/Medium/High risk
Action plan

104. A risk assessment of this kind should not only be carried out for each specific client and service on an individual basis, as required, but also to assess and document the risks on a firm-wide basis, and to keep risk assessment up-to-date through monitoring of the client relationship. The written risk assessment should be made accessible to all professionals having to perform AML/CFT duties. Proper safeguards should be put in place to ensure privacy of clients.

105. Where legal professionals are involved in longer term transactions, risk assessments should be undertaken at suitable intervals across the life of the transaction, to ensure no significant risk factors have changed in the intervening period (e.g. new parties to the transaction, new sources of funds etc.). See [3.4.2] Ongoing monitoring of clients and special activities.

106. A final risk assessment should be undertaken before a transaction has completed, allowing time for any required suspicious activity report, where required and appropriate, to be filed and any authority to move or transfer assets to be obtained from law enforcement (in countries where this is applicable).

3.4. Risk management and mitigation

107. Identification and assessment of the ML/TF risks associated with certain clients or categories of clients, and certain types of work will allow legal professionals to determine and implement reasonable and proportionate measures and controls to mitigate such risks. The risks and appropriate measures will depend on the nature of the legal professional’s role and involvement. Circumstances may vary considerably between professionals who represent clients directly and those who are engaged for distinct purposes including, for example, civil ³⁸ “Action plans” are described in some jurisdictions as the “document your thought process” form.

law notaries. In high risk scenarios, legal professionals must consider the extent to which they might be involved in unwittingly committing the substantive offence of ML/TF by providing a legal service even with the application of enhanced CDD measures. Under such scenario, legal professionals should consider not to provide services or establish/continue business relationship with the client.

108. Legal professionals should implement appropriate measures and controls to mitigate the potential ML/TF risks for those clients that, as the result of a RBA, are determined to be higher risk. These measures should be tailored to the specific risks faced, both to ensure the risk is adequately addressed and to assist in the appropriate allocation of finite resources for CDD. Paramount among these measures is the requirement to train legal professionals and appropriate staff to identify and detect relevant changes in client activity by reference to risk-based criteria. These measures and controls may include:

- a) General training on ML/TF methods and risks relevant to legal professionals.
- b) Targeted training for increased risk awareness by the legal professionals providing specified activities to higher risk clients or to legal professionals undertaking higher risk work.
- c) Increased or more appropriately targeted CDD or enhanced CDD for higher risk clients/situations that concentrate on providing a better understanding about the potential source of risk and obtaining the necessary information to make informed decisions about how to proceed (if the transaction/ business relationship can be proceeded with). This could include training on when and how to ascertain, evidence and record source of wealth and beneficial ownership information if required.
- d) Periodic review of the services offered by the legal professional and/or law firm, and the periodic evaluation of the AML/CFT framework applicable to the law firm or legal professional and the law firm's own AML/CFT procedures, to determine whether the ML/TF risk has increased and adequate controls are in place to mitigate those increased risks.
- e) Reviewing client relationships on a periodic basis to determine whether the ML/TF risk has increased.

3.4.1. Initial and ongoing CDD (R.10 and 22)

109. CDD measures should allow a legal professional to establish with reasonable certainty the true identity of each client. The legal professional's procedures should apply in circumstances where a legal professional is preparing for or carrying out⁴⁰ the specified activities listed in R.22 and include procedures to:

- a) Identify and appropriately verify the identity of each client on a timely basis.
- b) Identify the beneficial owner, and take reasonable measures to verify the identity of the beneficial owner on risk-sensitive basis such that the legal professional is reasonably satisfied that it knows who the beneficial owner is. The general rule is that clients should be subject to the full range of CDD measures, including the requirement to identify the beneficial owner in accordance with R.10. The purpose of identifying beneficial ownership is to ascertain those natural persons who exercise effective influence or control over a client, whether by means of ownership, voting rights or otherwise. Legal professionals should have regard to this purpose when identifying the beneficial owner. They may use a RBA to determine the extent to which they are required to verify the identity of beneficial owner, depending on the type of client, business relationship and transaction and other appropriate factors in accordance with R.10 and INR.10 as articulated in the following box. This information is in many circumstances critical to helping legal professionals avoid conflicts of interest with other clients.

Box 3. Beneficial ownership information obligations (see R.10, R.22 and INR.10)

R.10 sets out the instances where legal professionals will be required to take steps to identify and verify beneficial owners, including when there is a suspicion of ML/TF, when establishing business relations, or where there are doubts about the veracity of previously provided information. INR.10 indicates that the purpose of this requirement is two-fold: first, to prevent the unlawful use of legal persons and arrangements, by gaining a sufficient understanding of the client to be able to properly assess the potential ML/TF risks associated with the business relationship; and, second, to take appropriate steps to mitigate the risks. Legal professionals should have regard to these purposes when assessing what steps are reasonable to take to verify beneficial ownership, commensurate with the level of risk.⁴¹

At the outset of determining beneficial ownership, steps should be taken to identify how the immediate client can be identified. Legal professionals can verify the identity of a client by, for example meeting the client in person and then verifying their identity through the production of a passport/identity card and documentation confirming his/her address. Legal professionals can further verify the identity of a client on the basis of documentation or information obtained from reliable, publicly available sources (which are independent of the client).

A more difficult situation arises where there is a beneficial owner who is not the immediate client (e.g. in the case of companies and other entities). In such a scenario reasonable steps must be taken so that the legal professional is satisfied about the identity of the beneficial owner and takes reasonable measures to verify the beneficial owner's identity. This likely requires taking steps to understand the ownership and control of a separate legal entity that is the client that may be through public searches as well as by seeking information directly from the client. Legal professionals will likely need to obtain the following information for a client that is a legal entity:

- a) the name of the company;
- b) the company registration number;
- c) the registered address and/ or principal place of business (if different);
- d) the identity of shareholders and their percentage ownership;
- e) names of the board of directors or senior individuals responsible for the company's operations;
- f) the law to which the company is subject and its constitution; and ⁴¹ For more information and guidance relating to beneficial ownership information please refer to AML/CFT 2013 Methodology Criteria 10.5 and 10.8-10.12.

- g) the types of activities and transactions in which the company engages.

To verify the information listed above, legal professional may use sources such as the following:

- a) constitutional documents (such as a certificate of incorporation, memorandum and articles of incorporation/association);
- b) details from company registers;
- c) shareholder agreement or other agreements between shareholders concerning control of the legal person; and
- d) filed audited accounts.

Legal professionals should adopt a RBA to identify beneficial owners of an entity. It is often necessary to use a combination of public sources and to seek further confirmation from the immediate client that information from public sources is correct and up-to-date or to ask for additional documentation that confirms the beneficial ownership and company structure.

The obligation to identify beneficial ownership does not end with identifying the first level of ownership, but requires steps to be taken to identify the beneficial ownership at each level of the corporate structure until an ultimate beneficial owner is identified. This requires the same process of identifying and verifying information in relation to legal entities and natural persons at each level of a corporate structure.

- c) Obtain appropriate information to understand the client's circumstances and business depending on the nature, scope and timing of the services to be provided including, where necessary, the source of funds of the client. This information may be obtained from clients during the normal course of their instructions to legal professionals.
- d) Conduct ongoing CDD on the business relationship and scrutiny of transactions throughout the course of that relationship to ensure that the transactions being conducted are consistent with legal professional's knowledge of the client, its business and risk profile, including where necessary, the source of funds. Ongoing due diligence ensures that the documents, data or information collected under the CDD process is kept up-to-date and relevant by undertaking reviews of existing records, particularly for higher-risk categories of clients. Undertaking appropriate CDD also allows the accurate filing of STRs to FIU, or to respond to requests for information from FIU and law enforcement.

110. The starting point is for legal professionals to assess the risks that the client may pose taking into consideration any appropriate risk variables (and any mitigating factors) before making a final determination to accept the client, reject the client, or request additional information. In many situations and in many jurisdictions this risk assessment is required to be documented and kept on the client's file. The legal professional should review this file as necessary, especially in a situation where the client looks to engage in a one-off or atypical transaction or where new red flags arise. The legal professional's risk assessment should inform the overall approach to CDD and appropriate verification. Legal professionals should reasonably determine the CDD requirements appropriate to each client, which may include:

- a) Standard CDD: A standard level of CDD, generally to be applied to all clients to whom specified legal services are provided.
- b) Simplified CDD: The standard level being reduced after consideration of appropriate risk variables, and in recognised lower risk scenarios, such as:

- i. Publicly listed companies traded on certain exchanges (and their majority owned subsidiaries). Although it should not be assumed that all publicly listed companies will qualify for simplified CDD, for example appropriate levels of reporting to the market will be a factor to take into account, as well as geographic risk factors.
 - ii. Financial institutions and other businesses and professions (domestic or foreign) subject to an AML/CFT regime consistent with the FATF Recommendations.
 - iii. Public administration or enterprises (other than those from countries that are being identified by credible sources as having inadequate AML/CFT systems) subject to sanctions, embargos or similar measures issued by the United Nations, having significant levels of corruption or other criminal activity or providing funding or support for terrorist activities, or that have designated terrorist organisations operating within their country.
- a) Enhanced CDD: An increased level of CDD for those clients that are reasonably determined by the legal professional to be of higher risk. This may be the result of the client's business activity, ownership structure, particular service offered including work involving higher risk countries or defined by applicable law or regulation as posing higher risk.

111. Where the legal professional is unable to comply with the applicable CDD requirements, it should not carry out the transaction nor commence business relations, or it should terminate the business relationship and consider filing an STR in relation to the client.

112. A RBA means that legal professionals should perform varying levels of work according to the risk level. For example, where the client or the owner of the controlling interest is a public company that is subject to regulatory disclosure requirements, and that information is publicly available, fewer checks may be appropriate. In the case of trusts, foundations or similar legal entities where the beneficiaries are distinct from the legal owners of the entity, it will be necessary to form a reasonable level of knowledge and understanding of the classes and nature of the beneficiaries; the identities of the settlor, trustees or natural persons exercising effective control; and an indication of the purpose of the trust. Legal professionals will need to obtain a reasonable level of comfort that the declared purpose of the trust is in fact its true purpose.

113. The following box provides a non-exhaustive list of examples of standard, enhanced and simplified CDD:

Box 4. Examples of Standard/Simplified/Enhanced CDD measures (see also INR.10)

Standard CDD

- Identifying the client and verifying that client's identity using reliable, independent source documents, data or information
- Identifying the beneficial owner, and taking reasonable measures on a risk-sensitive basis to verify the identity of the beneficial owner, such that the legal professional is satisfied about the identity of beneficial owner. For legal persons and arrangements, this should include understanding the ownership and control structure of the client and gaining an understanding of the client's source of wealth and source of funds, where required
- Understanding and obtaining information on the purpose and intended nature of the business relationship

- Conducting ongoing due diligence on the business relationship and scrutiny of transactions undertaken throughout the course of that relationship to ensure that the transactions being conducted are consistent with the business and risk profile the client, including, where necessary, the source of wealth and funds

Simplified CDD

- Limiting the extent, type or timing of CDD measures
- Obtaining fewer elements of client identification data
- Altering the type of verification carried out on client's identity
- Simplifying the verification carried out on client's identity
- Inferring the purpose and nature of the transactions or business relationship established based on the type of transaction carried out or the relationship established
- Verifying the identity of the client and the beneficial owner after the establishment of the business relationship
- Reducing the frequency of client identification updates in the case of a business relationship
- Reducing the degree and extent of ongoing monitoring and scrutiny of transactions

Enhanced CDD

- Obtaining additional client information, such as the client's reputation and background from a wider variety of sources before the establishment of the business relationship and using the information to inform the client risk profile
- Carrying out additional searches (e.g., internet searches using independent and open sources) to better inform the client risk profile
- Where appropriate, undertaking further searches on the client or beneficial owner to specifically understand the risk that the client or beneficial owner may be involved in criminal activity
- Obtaining additional information about the client's source of wealth or funds involved to seek to ensure they do not constitute the proceeds of crime. This could include obtaining appropriate documentation concerning the source of wealth or funds
- Seeking additional information and, as appropriate, substantiating documentation, from the client about the purpose and intended nature of the transaction or the business relationship
- Increasing the frequency and intensity of transaction monitoring.
- Enhanced CDD may also include lowering the threshold of ownership (e.g. below 25%), to ensure complete understanding of the control structure of the entity involved. It may also include looking further than simply equity shares, to understand the voting rights of each party who holds an interest in the entity

3.4.2. Ongoing monitoring of clients and specified activities (R.10 and 23)

114. The degree and nature of ongoing monitoring by a legal professional will depend on the type of legal professional, and if it is a law firm, the size and geographic 'footprint' of the law firm, the ML/TF risks that the law firm has identified and the nature of the specified activity provided. In many instances, client information must already be monitored in this fashion to satisfy legal professionals' other legal, professional, or ethical obligations to both their clients and as part of their general regulatory obligations. For example, legal professionals may need to have a full and up-to-date understanding of their clients' business to fully satisfy fiduciary duties towards their clients. In some jurisdictions, ethical or professional obligations may require a legal professional to discontinue their representation of a client on learning certain adverse information. Given the nature of the advisory relationship legal professionals have with their clients, an element of that advisory relationship will usually involve frequent client contact. It should include procedures and training so that individuals having contact with the client understand those events that should trigger additional due diligence or a refreshing of existing due diligence. Monitoring is often best achieved by individuals having contact with the client (either face-to-face or by other means of communication).

115. In larger law firms serving clients with a wide range of operations, legal professionals with regular contact with the client may be narrowly focused on one aspect of the client's business and/or need for specific advice. In these circumstances, it may be more effective to have screening processes and tools to identify potential risks that are generic to the client's overall business, and that can then be flagged for the attention of legal professionals who have the most client contact. However, monitoring does not require legal professionals to function as, or assume the role of, a law enforcement or investigative authority vis-a-vis the client. It rather refers to maintaining awareness throughout the course of work for a client to the possibility of ML/TF activity and/or changes in the clients activities/personnel and/or other changing risk factors.

116. Monitoring of these advisory relationships cannot be achieved solely by reliance on automated systems and whether any such systems would be appropriate will depend in part on the nature of a legal professional's practice and resources reasonably available to the legal professional. For example, a sole practitioner would not be expected to devote an equivalent level of resources as a large law firm; rather, the sole practitioner would be expected to develop appropriate monitoring systems and a RBA proportionate to the scope and nature of the practitioner's practice. A legal professional's advisory relationships may well be best monitored by the individuals having direct client contact being appropriately trained to identify and detect changes in the risk profile of a client. Where appropriate this should be supported by systems, controls and records within a framework of support by the firm (e.g. tailored training programs appropriate to the level of staff responsibility, the role each staff member plays in the AML/CFT process at the firm and the types and volumes of clients and transaction for which the firm provided services).

117. Legal professionals should assess the adequacy of any systems, controls and processes on a periodic basis. Monitoring programs should fall within the system and control framework developed to manage the risk of the firm. Certain jurisdictions may require that the results of the monitoring be documented.

118. The civil law notary does not represent parties to a contract and therefore must maintain a fair position with regard to any duty to both parties.

3.4.3. Suspicious transaction reporting, tipping-off, internal control and higher-risk countries (R.23)

119. R.23 sets out obligations for legal professionals on reporting and tipping-off, internal controls and higher-risk countries as set out in R.20, R.21, R.18 and R.19.

Suspicious transaction reporting and tipping-off (R.20, R.21 and 23)

120. R.23 requires legal professionals to report suspicious transactions set out in R.20, when on behalf of, or for a client, they engage in a financial transaction in relation to the activities described in R.22. Subject to certain limitations, such reporting is not required if the relevant information is directly encompassed within a legitimate claim of professional secrecy or legal professional privilege. Legal professionals should be alert to these obligations in addition to separate requirements in their jurisdictions regarding tipping-off. These obligations, where they apply, can carry serious penalties when not properly complied with. As specified under INR.23, where legal professionals seek to dissuade a client from engaging in illegal activity, this does not amount to tipping-off.

121. Where a legal or regulatory requirement mandates the reporting of suspicious activity once a suspicion has been formed, a report must always be made promptly and, therefore, a RBA for the reporting of the suspicious activity under these circumstances is not applicable. STRs are not part of risk assessment, but rather reflect a response mechanism – typically to an FIU or SRB once a suspicion has been formed. Legal professionals have an obligation not to facilitate illegal activity, so if there are suspicions they could contact their FIU or SRB for guidance, obtain independent legal advice, if necessary and not provide services to that person/company and report the transaction or the attempted transaction.

Internal controls (R.18 and 23)

122. Legal professionals differ significantly from financial institutions in terms of size. By contrast to most financial institutions, a significant number of legal professionals have only a few staff. This limits the resources that small businesses and professions can dedicate to the fight against ML/TF. For a number of legal professionals, a single person may be responsible for the functions of front office, back office, reporting, and senior management. This dimension of a legal professional's practice environment should be taken into account in designing a risk-based framework for internal controls systems. INR.18 specifies that the type and extent of measures to be taken for each of its requirements should be appropriate having regard to the size, nature and risk profile of the business.

123. The risk-based process must be a part of the internal controls of the legal professional or law firm. Legal professionals operate within a wide range of differing business structures, from sole practitioners to large, multi-national partnerships. These structures often mean that legal professionals' businesses have a flat management structure and that most or all of the principals (or partners) of the firm hold ultimate management responsibility. In other organisations, legal professionals employ corporate style organisational structures with tiered management responsibility. In both cases the principals or the managers are ultimately responsible for ensuring that the organisation maintains an effective internal control structure. Engagement by the principals and managers in AML/CFT is an important aspect of the application of the RBA since such engagement reinforces a culture of compliance, ensuring that staff adheres to the legal professional's policies, procedures and processes to manage effectively ML/TF risks.

124. The nature and extent of the AML/CFT controls, as well as meeting national legal requirements, need to be proportionate to the risk involved in the services being offered. In addition to other compliance internal controls, the nature and extent of AML/CFT controls will depend upon a number of factors, such as:

- a) the nature, scale and complexity of a legal professional's business.
- b) the diversity of a legal professional's operations, including geographical diversity.
- c) the legal professional's client, service and activity profile.
- d) the degree of risk associated with each area of the legal professional's operations.
- e) the services being offered and the frequency of client contact (either by face-to-face meetings or by other means of communication).

125. Subject to the size and scope of the legal professional's organisation, the framework of risk-based internal controls should:

- a) have appropriate risk management systems to determine whether a client, potential client, or beneficial owner is a PEP or a person subject to applicable financial sanctions;
 - b) provide for adequate controls for higher risk clients and services as necessary (e.g. additional due diligence, obtaining information on the source of wealth and funds of a client, escalation or additional review and/or consultation by the legal professional or within a law firm);
 - c) provide increased focus on a legal professional's operations (e.g. services, clients and geographic locations) that are more vulnerable to abuse for ML/TF;
 - d) provide for periodic review of the risk assessment and management processes, taking into account the environment within which the legal professional operates and the services it provides;
 - e) designate personnel at an appropriate level who are responsible for managing AML/CFT compliance;
 - f) provide for an AML/CFT compliance function and review programme as appropriate given the scale of the organisation and the nature of the legal professional's practice;
 - g) inform the principals of compliance initiatives, identified compliance deficiencies and corrective action taken;
 - h) provide for programme continuity despite changes in management or employee composition or structure;
 - i) focus on meeting all regulatory measures for AML/CFT compliance, including record-keeping requirements and provide for timely updates in response to changes in regulations;
 - j) implement risk-based CDD policies, procedures and processes, including review of client relationships from time to time to determine the level of ML/TF risks;
 - k) provide for adequate supervision and support for staff activity that forms part of the organisation's AML/CFT programme;
 - l) incorporate AML/CFT compliance into job descriptions of relevant personnel;
 - m) for legal professionals that share a common arrangement in some way (e.g. alliances of law firms), to the extent possible, provide a common control framework;
 - n) adhere to country specific legislative requirements (such as residence requirements);
 - o) provide for policies and procedures to ensure staff awareness of STR filing requirements; and
 - p) implement a documented program of ongoing staff AML/CFT awareness and training.

126. Same measures and controls may often address more than one of the risk criteria identified, and it is not essential that a legal professional establish specific controls targeting each risk criterion.

127. Legal professionals should consider using reputable technology-driven solutions to minimise the risk of error and find efficiencies in their AML/CFT processes. As these solutions are likely to become more affordable, and more tailored to the legal profession as they continue to develop, this may be particularly important for smaller law firms that may be less able to commit significant resources of time to these activities. Under R.17, the ultimate responsibility for CDD measures should remain with legal professionals relying on the technology-driven solutions utilized.

128. At larger law firms, senior management should have a clear understanding of ML/TF risks to manage the affairs of the law firm and to ensure procedures are put in place to identify, manage, control and mitigate risks effectively. The RBA to AML/CFT needs to be embedded in the culture of law firms and the legal profession generally.

Internal mechanisms to ensure compliance

129. Legal professionals (and where relevant senior management) should monitor the effectiveness of internal controls. If they identify any weaknesses in those internal controls, improved procedures should be designed.

130. The most effective tool to monitor the internal controls is a regular (typically at least annually) independent (internal or external) compliance review. If carried out internally, a staff member who may have a good working knowledge of the law firm's AML/CFT internal control framework, policies and procedures and is sufficiently senior to challenge them should perform the review. The staff member should also be independent to the area under review. The compliance review should include a review of CDD documentation to confirm that staff are properly applying the law firm's procedures.

131. If the compliance review identifies areas of weakness and makes recommendations on how to improve the policies and procedures, then senior management should monitor how the law firm is acting on those recommendations.

132. Legal professionals should review their firm-wide risk assessments regularly and make sure that policies and procedures continue to target those areas where the ML/TF risks are highest.

Vetting, recruitment and remuneration

133. Legal professionals should consider the skills, knowledge and experience of staff for AML/CFT both before they are appointed to their role and on an ongoing basis. The level of assessment should be proportionate to their role in the firm and the ML/TF risks they may encounter. Assessment may include criminal records checking and other forms of pre-employment screening such as credit reference checks (as permitted under national legislation) for key staff positions.

Education, training and awareness

134. R.18 requires that legal professionals provide their staff with AML/CFT training. For legal professionals, and those in smaller law firms in particular, such training may also assist with raising awareness of monitoring obligations, and may also satisfy some jurisdictions' continuing legal education obligations. A legal professional's commitment to having appropriate controls in place relies fundamentally on both training and awareness. This requires a firm-wide effort to provide all relevant legal professionals with at least general information on AML/CFT laws, regulations and internal policies.

135. Firms should provide targeted training for increased awareness by the legal professionals providing specified activities to higher risk clients or to legal professionals undertaking higher risk work. Training should also be targeted towards the role that individual legal professionals perform in the AML/CFT process. This could include false documentation training for those undertaking identification and verification duties, or training regarding red flags for those undertaking client/transactional risk assessment.

136. Training is not necessarily resource-intensive and it can take many forms. Training can include group study where one member of staff outlines to other staff, relevant guidance, credible sources of information on legal sector risk or firm policies and/or provides regular email updates.

137. Case studies (both fact-based and hypotheticals) are a good way of bringing the regulations to life and making them more comprehensible. Legal professionals must also be alert to the interaction with, and importance of legal professional privilege and professional secrecy in relation to AML/CFT laws in their particular jurisdictions.⁴² Likewise, legal professionals should be aware of the scope of application of the legal professional privilege and professional secrecy in their jurisdictions, i.e., the cases and scenarios that fall under its application and those outside its scope.

138. In line with a RBA, particular attention should be given to risk factors or circumstances occurring in the legal professional's own practice. In addition, competent authorities, SRBs and representative bodies for both common and civil law notaries and law societies should work with educational institutions to ensure that the curriculum addresses ML/TF risks. The same training should also be made available for students taking courses to train to become legal professionals. For example, law societies and bar associations should be encouraged to produce jurisdiction-specific guidance based on this Guidance (such as the ABA's Voluntary Good Practices Guidance), offer continuing legal education programs on AML/CFT and the RBA and large law firms should be encouraged to conduct in-house training programs on AML/CFT and the RBA.

139. The overall RBA and the various methods available for training and education gives legal professionals flexibility regarding the frequency, delivery mechanisms and focus of such training. Legal professionals should review their own staff and available resources and implement training programs that provide appropriate AML/CFT information that is:

- a) tailored to the relevant staff responsibility (e.g. client contact or administration);
- b) at the appropriate level of detail (e.g. considering the nature of services provided by the legal professional);
- c) at a frequency suitable to the risk level of the type of work undertaken by the legal professional; and
- d) used to assess staff knowledge of the information provided.

⁴² See also the FATF Report on Vulnerabilities in the Legal Sector (2013), Chapter 4 "ML Typologies".

Higher-risk countries (R.19 and 23)

140. Consistent with R.19, legal professionals should apply enhanced CDD measures (also see box in paragraph 103 above), proportionate to the risks, to business relationships and transactions with clients from countries for which this is called for by the FATF.

4. Section IV- Guidance for supervisors

141. The RBA to AML/CFT aims to develop prevention or mitigation measures, which are commensurate with the risks identified. This applies to the way supervisory authorities allocate their resources. R.28 requires that legal professionals are subject to adequate AML/CFT regulation and supervision. Supervisors and SRBs have different roles across jurisdictions and this section should be read in the context of what is applicable for a specific jurisdiction. Whichever model of supervision (i.e. by a designated supervisor or a SRB) is adopted by a country, it should be effective.

142. In many jurisdictions, supervisors and SRBs take an active role in identifying ML/TF risks and may take a direct approach to regulating legal professionals' obligatory responsibilities both generally and with regards to AML/CFT. Supervisors or SRBs should identify the particularities of the sector, assess its risks, controls and procedures in order to efficiently allocate its resources. In particular, supervisors for legal professionals should clearly allocate responsibility for managing AML/CFT related activity, where they are also responsible for other regulatory areas.

143. Although a country may have a legal framework that does not fully accommodate the supervision of legal professionals in the manner described in this Section, the supervision of legal professionals in that country should nonetheless include as a minimum:

- a) A requirement that legal professionals perform risk assessment at firm, client and transactional level.
- b) A requirement that legal professionals perform appropriate risk-based CDD.
- c) Procedures that ensure the system for licensing legal professionals prevents criminals from becoming legal professionals.
- d) Procedures determined to ensure prompt investigation of legal professional misuse of client/ trust funds or alleged involvement in ML/TF schemes.
- e) A requirement that legal professionals complete periodic continuing legal education in CDD and AML/CFT topics.
- f) A requirement that legal professionals report suspicious transactions, comply with tipping-off and confidentiality requirements, internal controls requirements and higher-risk countries requirements.
- g) A requirement that legal professionals adequately document risk assessment, CDD and other AML related decisions and processes undertaken.

4.1. Risk-based approach to supervision

144. R.28 requires that legal professionals are subject to adequate AML/CFT regulation and supervision for monitoring compliance. A RBA to AML/CFT means that the measures taken to reduce ML/TF are proportionate to the risks. Supervisors and SRBs should supervise more effectively by allocating resources to areas of higher ML/TF risk. While it is each country's responsibility to ensure there is an adequate national framework in place in relation to regulation and supervision of legal professionals, any relevant supervisors and SRBs should have a clear understanding of the ML/TF risks present in the relevant jurisdiction.⁴³ SRBs' role in supervision and monitoring

145. Countries can ensure that legal professionals are subject to effective oversight through the supervision performed by a SRB. A SRB is a body representing a profession (e.g. legal professionals, notaries, other independent legal professionals, accountants or TCSPs) that has a role (either exclusive or in conjunction with other entities) in regulating the persons who are qualified to enter and practise in the profession. A SRB also may perform supervisory or monitoring functions (e.g. to enforce rules to ensure that high ethical and moral standards are maintained by those practising the profession).

146. SRBs should have appropriate powers to perform their supervisory functions (including powers to monitor and sanction), and adequate financial, human and technical resources. SRBs should determine the frequency and intensity of their supervisory or monitoring actions on a RBA, taking into account inherent ML/TF risks in the legal sector, and mitigation by sole practitioners and/or law firms.

147. Countries should ensure that a SRB is equipped in identifying and sanctioning non-compliance by its members. Countries should also ensure that SRBs are well-informed about the importance of AML/CFT supervision, including enforcement actions as needed.

148. Supervisors and SRBs should clearly allocate responsibility for managing AML/CFT related activity, where they are also responsible for other regulatory areas. Countries should also address the risk that AML/CFT supervision by SRBs could be hampered by conflicting objectives pertaining to the SRB's role in representing their members, which the SRB is also obligated to supervise. If a SRB contains members of the supervised population, or represents those people, the relevant person should not continue to take part in the monitoring/ supervision of their practice/law firm to avoid conflicts of interest.

4.2. Background: national frameworks and understanding ML/TF risk- the role of countries

149. Countries should ensure that the extent to which a national framework allows legal professionals to apply a RBA should also reflect the nature, diversity and maturity of the sector, and its risk profile as well the ML/TF risks associated with individual legal professionals.

150. Access to information about ML/TF risks is essential for an effective RBA. Countries are required to take appropriate steps to identify and assess ML/TF risks on an ongoing basis in order to (a) inform potential changes to the country's AML/CFT regime, including changes to laws, regulations and other measures; (b) assist in the allocation and prioritisation of AML/CFT resources by competent authorities; and (c) make information available for AML/CFT risk assessments conducted by legal professionals. Countries should keep the risk assessments up-to-date and should have mechanisms to provide appropriate information on the results to competent authorities, SRBs and legal professionals.⁴⁴ In situations where some legal professionals have limited capacity to identify ML/TF risks, countries should work with the sector to understand their risks.

151. Supervisors and SRBs should, as applicable draw on a variety of sources to identify and assess ML/TF risks. These may include, but will not be limited to, the jurisdiction's national risk assessments, supra-national risk assessments, domestic or international typologies and supervisory expertise, as well as FIU feedback. The necessary information can also be obtained through appropriate information-sharing and collaboration among AML/CFT supervisors, when there are more than one for different sectors (legal professionals, accountants and TCSPs).

⁴³ See INR 28.1.

152. Where competent authorities do not adequately understand the specific environment in which legal professionals operate in the country, it may be appropriate for competent authorities to consider undertaking a more targeted sectoral risk assessment.

153. Supervisors and SRBs should understand the level of inherent risk including the nature and complexity of services provided by the legal professional. Supervisors and SRBs should also consider the type of services the legal professional is providing as well as its size and business model (e.g. whether it is a sole practitioner), corporate governance arrangements, financial and accounting information, delivery channels, client profiles, geographic location and countries of operation. Supervisors and SRBs should also consider the controls legal professionals have in place (e.g. the quality of the risk management policy, the functioning of the internal oversight functions and the quality of oversight of any outsourcing and subcontracting arrangements). Supervisors should note that under the RBA, particularly in the legal profession sector, given their diversity in scale, functions and number, there may be valid reasons for differences among risks and controls. There is therefore no one-size-fits-all approach. In evaluating the adequacy of their RBA, supervisors should take into consideration the circumstances of these differences.

154. Supervisors and SRBs should seek to ensure that their supervised populations are fully aware of, and compliant with measures to identify and verify a client, source of wealth and funds where required, along with measures designed to ensure transparency of beneficial ownership, as these are cross-cutting issues that affect several aspects of AML/CFT.

155. To further understand the vulnerabilities associated with beneficial ownership, with a particular focus on the involvement of professional intermediaries, supervisors should stay abreast of research papers published by international bodies.⁴⁵ Useful reference include the Joint FATF and Egmont Group Report on Concealment of Beneficial Ownership published in July 2018.

156. Supervisors and SRBs should review their assessment of legal professionals' ML/TF risk profiles periodically, including when circumstances change materially or relevant new threats emerge.

4.2.1. Mitigating and managing ML/TF risk

157. Supervisors and SRBs must take proportionate measures to mitigate and manage ML/TF risk. Supervisors and SRBs should determine the frequency and intensity of these measures based on their understanding of the inherent ML/TF risks. Supervisors and SRBs should consider the characteristics of the legal professionals, particularly their role as professional intermediaries. It is essential to have a clear understanding of the ML/TF risks: (a) present in the country; and (b) associated with the type of legal professionals and their clients, products and services.⁴⁶ Supervisors or SRBs may determine that individual documented risk assessments are not required, provided that the specific risks inherent to the sector are clearly identified and understood.

158. Supervisors and SRBs should take into account the risk profile of legal professionals when assessing the adequacy of internal controls, policies and procedures.⁴⁷

159. Supervisors and SRBs should develop a means of identifying which legal professionals or classes of legal professionals are at the greatest risk of being used by criminals and communicate those findings to the legal professionals. This involves considering both the probability and impact of ML/TF risk.

160. Probability means the likelihood of ML/TF taking place as a consequence of the activity undertaken by legal professionals and the environment in which they operate. The risk can also vary depending on other indicators:

- a) product and service risk (the likelihood that products or services can be used for ML/TF);
- b) client risk (the likelihood that clients' funds may have criminal origins);
- c) nature of transactions (e.g. frequency, volume and counterparties);
- d) geographical risk (does the legal professional, its clients or other offices perform specified activities in riskier locations); and
- e) other indicators of risk are based on a combination of objective factors and experience, such as the supervisor's wider work with the legal professional as well as information on legal professional's compliance history, complaints about the legal professional or about the quality of the legal professional's internal controls. Other such factors may include information from government/law enforcement sources or whistle-blowers.

161. In adopting a RBA to supervision, supervisors may consider allocating supervised entities sharing similar characteristics and risk profiles into groupings for supervision purposes. Examples of characteristics and risk profiles could include the size of business, type of clients serviced and geographic areas of activities. The setting up of such groupings could allow supervisors to take a comprehensive view of the sector, as opposed to an approach where the supervisors concentrate on the individual risks posed by the individual firms. If the risk profile of a legal professional within a grouping changes, supervisors may reassess the supervisory approach, which may include removing the firm from the grouping.

162. Supervisors and SRBs should also consider the impact, (i.e. the potential harm caused) if the legal professional or firm facilitates, unwittingly or otherwise, ML/TF. A small number of legal professionals may cause a high level of harm, including reputational harm to the profession. This can depend on:

- a) size (i.e., turnover), number and type of clients, number of office locations, value of transactions, and
- b) links or involvement with other businesses (susceptibility to being involved in 'layering' activity, e.g. concealing the origin of the transaction with the purpose to legalise the asset).

See INR 28.3

163. Supervisors and SRBs should update the risk assessment on an ongoing basis. The result from the assessment will help determine the resources the supervisor will allocate to the supervision of the legal professionals.

164. Supervisors or SRBs should consider whether legal professionals meet the ongoing requirements for continued participation in the profession as well as assessments of competence and of fitness and character. This will include whether the legal professional meets expectations related to AML/CFT compliance. This will take place both when a supervised entity joins the profession, and on an ongoing basis thereafter.

165. If a jurisdiction chooses to classify an entire sector as higher risk, it should be possible to differentiate among categories of legal professionals based on various factors such as their client base, countries they deal with and applicable AML/CFT controls. Other determinative factors may include (a) whether the legal professional conducts litigation or transactional business; (b) whether the clients of the legal professional's firm are in the private or public sector; or (c) whether the legal professional's business is internationally or domestically focused.

166. Supervisors and SRBs should acknowledge that in a risk-based regime, not all legal professionals will adopt identical AML/CFT controls and that an isolated incident where the legal professional is part of an illegal transaction unwittingly does not necessarily invalidate the integrity of a legal professionals' AML/CFT controls. At the same time, legal professionals should understand that a flexible RBA does not exempt them from applying effective AML/CFT controls.

4.3. Supervision of the RBA

4.3.1. Licensing or Registration

167. R.28 requires a country to ensure that regulated entities including legal professionals are subject to regulatory and supervisory measures to ensure compliance by these businesses and professions with AML/CFT requirements.

168. R.28 requires the supervisor or SRB to take the necessary measures to prevent criminals or their associates from being professionally accredited or holding or being the beneficial owner of a significant or controlling interest in an accredited legal professional entity (where this is permitted under national law and regulations) or holding a management function. This may be achieved through the evaluation of these persons through a "fit and proper" test.

169. A licensing or registration mechanism is one of the means to identify legal professionals to whom the regulatory and supervisory measures, including the "fit and proper" test should be applied. It also enables the identification of the population of legal professionals, for the purposes of assessing and understanding the ML/TF risks for the country, and the action that should be taken to mitigate them in accordance with R.1. Not all jurisdictions take this approach, and the application and precise objectives of licensing and registration differ among the jurisdictions that do use these mechanisms.

170. Licensing or registration provides a supervisor or SRB with the means to fulfil a "gatekeeper" role over who can enter a profession in which many individuals will be required to undertake the specified activities set forth in R.22. Not all accredited legal professionals who are appropriately licensed or registered may be performing the specified activities under R.22. There is no requirement for separate licensing or registration of legal professionals on the basis of their practice areas under the FATF Recommendations. Supervisors and SRBs should ensure that their supervisory efforts are directed at legal professionals whose practices involve the specified activities under R.22. Licensing or registration should also ensure that upon qualification, legal professionals are subject to AML/CFT compliance monitoring.

171. The supervisor or SRB should actively identify individuals and businesses who should be supervised by using intelligence from other competent authorities (FIUs, company registry, or tax authority), information from financial institutions and DNFBPs, complaints by the public and open source information from advertisements and business and commercial registries, or any other sources that indicates that there are unsupervised individuals or businesses providing the specified activities under R.22.

172. Licensing or registration frameworks should, define the activities that are subject to licensing or registration, prohibit unlicensed or unregistered individuals or businesses providing these activities and set out measures for both refusing licences or registrations and for removing “bad actors”.

173. The terms “licensing” or “registration” are not interchangeable. Licensing regimes generally tend to operate over financial institutions and impose mandatory minimum requirements based upon Core Principles on issues such as capital, governance, and resourcing to manage and mitigate prudential, conduct as well as ML/TF risks on an on-going basis. Some jurisdictions have adopted similar licensing regimes for legal professionals, generally where legal professionals carry out trust and corporate services, to encompass aspects of conduct requirements in managing higher ML/TF risks that have been identified in that sector.

174. A jurisdiction may have a registration framework over the entire DNFBP sector, including legal professionals or have a specific registration framework for each constituent of a DNFBP. Generally, a supervisor or SRB carries out the registration function.

175. The supervisor or SRB should ensure that requirements for licensing or registration and the process for applying are clear, objective, publicly available and consistently applied. Determination of the licence or registration should be objective and timely. A SRB could be responsible for both supervision and for representing the interest of its members. The SRB should ensure that registration decisions are taken separately and independently from its activities regarding member representation.

Fit and proper tests

176. A fit and proper test provides a possible mechanism for a supervisor or SRB to take the necessary measures to prevent criminals or their associates from owning, controlling or holding a management function. Such tests are used in relation to legal professionals in some jurisdictions and may be used by supervisors or SRBs to ensure compliance with AML/CFT requirements.

177. In accordance with R.28, the supervisor or SRB must establish the integrity of every beneficial owner, controller and individual holding a management function.

178. In some jurisdictions, a fit and proper test forms a fundamental part of determining whether to license or register the applicant and whether on an ongoing basis the licensee or registrant (including its owners and controllers, where applicable) remains fit and proper to continue in that role. The initial assessment of an individual’s fitness and propriety is a combination of obtaining information from the individual and corroborating elements of that information against independent credible sources to determine whether the individual is fit and proper to hold that role.

179. The process for determining fitness and propriety generally requires the applicant to complete a questionnaire. The questionnaire could gather personal identification information, residence and employment history, and require disclosure by the applicant of any convictions or adverse judgements, including pending prosecutions and convictions. Elements of this information should be corroborated to establish the bona fides of an individual. Such checks could include enquiries about the individual with law enforcement agencies and other supervisors or screening the individual against independent electronic search databases. The personal data collected should be kept confidential.

180. The supervisor or SRB should also ensure that on an ongoing basis that owners, controllers and individuals holding management functions are fit and proper. A fit and proper test should apply to new owners, controllers and individuals holding a management function. The supervisor or SRB should consider reviewing the fitness and propriety of these individuals arising from any supervisory findings, receipt of information from other competent authorities; or open source information indicating significant adverse developments.

Guarding against “brass-plate” operations

181. The supervisor or SRB should ensure that its licensing or registration requirements require the applicant to have a meaningful physical presence in the country. Depending on the circumstances, a business with only staff who do not possess the professional requirements of a legal professional might not be licensed or registered.

182. A supervisor or SRB should consider the ownership and control structure of the applicant to make a licensing or registration decision, where applicable. Factors to take into account could include consideration of where the beneficial owners and controllers reside and the type and quality of its management, including directors, managers and compliance officers.

183. The supervisor or SRB should consider whether the ownership and control structure of law firms unduly hinders its identification of the beneficial owners and controllers or presents obstacles to applying effective supervision.

4.4. Monitoring and supervision

184. Supervisors and SRBs should take measures to effectively monitor legal professionals providing specified legal services through on-site and off-site supervision. The nature of this monitoring will depend on the risk profiles prepared by the supervisor or SRB and the connected risk-based approach. Supervisors and SRBs may choose to adjust:

- a) the level of checks required to perform their authorisation function: where the ML/TF risk associated with the sector is low, the opportunities for ML/TF associated with a particular business activity may be limited, and approvals may be made on a review of basic documentation. Where the ML/TF risk associated with the sector is high, supervisors and SRBs may ask for additional information.
- b) the type of on-site or off-site AML/CFT supervision: to the extent permitted by their regime, supervisors and SRBs may determine the correct mix of on-site and off-site supervision of legal professionals. Off-site supervision may involve analysis of annual independent audits and other mandatory reports, identifying risky intermediaries (i.e. on the basis of the size of the firms, involvement in cross-border activities, or specific business sectors), automated scrutiny of registers to detect missing beneficial ownership information and identification of persons responsible for the filing. It may also include undertaking thematic reviews of the sector, making compulsory the periodic information returns from firms. Off-site supervision alone may not be appropriate in higher risk situations. On-site inspections involve reviewing AML/CFT internal policies, controls and procedures, interviewing members of senior management and staff, gatekeeper's own risk assessments, spot checking CDD documents and supporting evidence, reporting ML/TF suspicions in relation to clients, legal professionals and others which may be observed in the course of an onsite visit and where appropriate, sample testing of reporting obligations.

- c) the frequency and nature of ongoing AML/CFT supervision: supervisors and SRBs should proactively adjust the frequency of AML/CFT supervision in line with the risks identified and combine periodic reviews and ad hoc AML/CFT supervision as issues emerge (e.g. as a result of whistleblowing, information from law enforcement, or other supervisory findings resulting from legal professionals' inclusion in thematic review samples).
- d) the intensity of AML/CFT supervision: supervisors and SRBs should decide on the appropriate scope or level of assessment in line with the risks identified, with the aim of assessing the adequacy of legal professionals' policies and procedures that are designed to prevent them from being abused. Examples of more intensive supervision could include: detailed testing of systems and files to verify the implementation and adequacy of the legal professionals' risk assessment, CDD, reporting and record-keeping policies and processes, internal auditing, interviews with operational staff, senior management and the Board of Directors and AML/CFT assessment in particular lines of business.

185. Supervisors and SRBs should use their findings to review and update their ML/TF risk assessments and, where necessary, consider whether their approach to AML/CFT supervision and the existing AML/CFT rules and guidance remain adequate. Whenever appropriate, and in compliance with relevant confidentiality requirements, these findings should be communicated to legal professionals to enable them to enhance their RBA.

186. Record keeping and quality assurance are important, so that supervisors can document and test the reasons for significant decisions relating to AML/CFT supervision. Supervisors should have an appropriate information retention policy and be able to easily retrieve information while complying with the relevant data protection legislation. Record keeping is crucial and fundamental to the supervisors' work. Undertaking adequate quality assurance is also fundamental to the supervisory process to ensure decision-making/sanctioning is consistent across the supervised population.

4.4.1. Enforcement

187. R.28 requires supervisors or SRB to have adequate powers to perform their functions, including powers to monitor compliance by legal professionals. R.35 requires countries to have the power to impose sanctions, whether criminal, civil or administrative, on DNFBPs, to include legal professionals when providing the services outlined in R.22(d). Sanctions should be available for the directors and senior management of the firm when a legal professional fails to comply with requirements.

188. Supervisors and SRBs should use proportionate actions, including a range of supervisory interventions and corrective actions to ensure that any identified deficiencies are addressed in a timely manner. Sanctions may range from informal or written warning, censure and reprimand to punitive measures (including disbarment and criminal prosecutions where appropriate) for more egregious non-compliance, as identified weaknesses can have wider consequences. Generally, systemic breakdowns or significantly inadequate controls will result in more severe supervisory response.

189. Enforcement by supervisors and SRBs should be proportionate while having a deterrent effect. Supervisors and SRBs must have (or must delegate to those who have) sufficient resources to investigate and monitor non-compliance. Enforcement should aim to remove the benefits of non-compliance.

4.4.2. Guidance

190. Supervisors and SRBs should communicate their regulatory expectations. This could be done through a consultative process after meaningful engagement with relevant stakeholders, including legal professionals. This guidance may be in the form of high-level requirements based on desired outcomes, risk-based rules, and information about how supervisors interpret relevant legislation or regulation, or more detailed guidance about how particular AML/CFT controls are best applied. Guidance issued to legal professionals should also discuss ML/TF risk within their sector and outline ML/TF indicators (i.e. red flags) and methods of risk assessment to help them identify suspicious transactions. All such guidance should preferably be consulted on, where appropriate, and drafted in ways that are appropriate to the context of the role of supervisors and SRBs in the relevant jurisdiction.

191. Where supervisors' guidance remains high-level and principles-based, this may be supplemented by further guidance written by the legal profession, which may cover operational and practical issues, and be more detailed and explanatory in nature. Training events may also provide an effective means to ensure legal professionals awareness and compliance with AML/CFT responsibilities. Where supervisors cooperate to produce combined guidance across sectors, supervisors should ensure this guidance adequately addresses the diversity of roles that come within the guidance's remit, and that such guidance provides practical direction to all its intended recipients. The private sector guidance should be consistent with national legislation and with any guidelines issued by competent authorities with regard to the legal profession and be consistent with all other legal requirements and obligations.

192. Supervisors should consider communicating with other relevant domestic supervisory authorities to secure a coherent interpretation of the legal obligations and to minimise disparities across sectors (such as legal professionals, accountants and TCSPs). Multiple guidance should not create opportunities for regulatory arbitrage. Relevant supervisory authorities should consider preparing joint guidance in consultation with the relevant sectors, while recognising that in many jurisdictions legal professionals will consider that separate guidance targeted at the legal profession will be the most appropriate and effective form.

193. Information and guidance should be provided by supervisors in an up-to-date and accessible format. It could include sectoral guidance material, findings of thematic reviews, training events, newsletters, internet-based material, oral updates on supervisory visits, meetings and annual reports.

194. An SRB should ensure that advice given by the representative side of the organisation correlates to the rules and guidance set by the supervisory side.

4.4.3. Training

195. Supervisors and SRBs should ensure that their staff, and other relevant employees, are trained to assess the quality of ML/TF risk assessments and to consider the adequacy, proportionality, effectiveness, and efficiency of the AML/CFT policies, procedures and internal controls. It is recommended that the training has a practical basis/dimension.

196. Training should allow supervisory staff to form sound judgments about the quality of the risk assessments made by legal professionals and the adequacy and proportionality of AML/CFT controls of legal professionals. It should also aim at achieving consistency in the supervisory approach at a national level, in cases where there are multiple competent supervisory authorities or when the national supervisory model is devolved or fragmented.

4.4.4. Endorsements

197. Supervisors should avoid endorsing any third party commercial providers of AML systems, tools or software to avoid conflicts of interest in the effective supervision of firms.

4.4.5. Information exchange

198. Information exchange between the public and private sector is of importance in the legal professions sector and may form an integral part of a country's strategy for detecting and combating ML/TF, in accordance with relevant data protection legislation. Information sharing and intelligence sharing arrangements between supervisors and public authorities (such as law enforcement), where applicable should be robust and secure.

199. In situations where legal professionals do not have experience, or have limited capacity for an effective assessment of ML/TF risk, it will be important for public authorities to share risk information to better help inform the risk assessments of legal professionals.

200. The type of information that could be shared between the public and private sectors include:

- a) ML/TF risk assessments;
- b) Typologies (i.e., case studies) of how money launderers or terrorist financiers have misused legal professionals;
- c) feedback on STRs and other relevant reports;
- d) targeted unclassified intelligence. In specific circumstances, and subject to appropriate safeguards such as confidentiality agreements, it may also be appropriate for authorities to share targeted confidential information with legal professionals as a class or individually; and
- e) countries, persons or organisations whose assets or transactions should be frozen pursuant to targeted financial sanctions as required by R.6.

201. Domestic co-operation and information exchange between FIU and supervisors of legal professionals and among competent authorities including law enforcement, intelligence, FIU, tax authorities, supervisors and SRBs is also important for effective monitoring/supervision of the sector. Such co-operation and co-ordination may help avoid gaps and overlaps in supervision and ensure sharing of good practices and findings. Such intelligence should also inform a supervisor's risk-based approach to supervisory assurance. Intelligence about active misconduct investigations and completed cases between supervisors and law enforcement agencies should also be encouraged where appropriate. When sharing information, protocols and safeguards should be implemented in order to protect personal data.

202. Cross border information sharing of authorities and private sector with their international counterparts is of importance in the legal sector, taking into account the multi-jurisdictional reach of many legal professionals.

4.5. Supervision of beneficial ownership and source of funds/wealth requirements

203. The FATF Recommendations require competent authorities to have access to adequate, accurate and timely information on the beneficial ownership and control of legal persons (R.24). In addition, countries must take measures to prevent the misuse of legal arrangements for ML/TF, in particular ensuring that there is adequate, accurate and timely information on express trusts (R.25). Implementation of the FATF Recommendations on beneficial ownership has proven challenging. As a result, the FATF developed the FATF Guidance on Transparency and Beneficial Ownership to assist countries in their implementation of R.24 and R.25, as well as R.1 as it relates to understanding the ML/TF risks of legal persons and legal arrangements. The FATF and Egmont Group also published the Report on Concealment of Beneficial Ownership in July 2018 which identified issues to help address the vulnerabilities associated with the concealment of beneficial ownership.

204. R.24 and R.25 require countries to have mechanisms to ensure that information provided to registries is accurate and updated on a timely basis and that beneficial ownership information is accurate and current. To determine the adequacy of a system for monitoring and ensuring compliance, countries should have regard to the risk of AML/CFT in given businesses (i.e., if there is a proven higher risk then higher monitoring measures should be taken). Legal professionals must, however, be cautious in blindly relying on the information contained in registries. It is important for there to be some form of ongoing monitoring during a relationship to detect unusual and potentially suspicious transactions as a result of a change in beneficial ownership as registries are unlikely to provide such information on a dynamic basis.

205. Those responsible for company formation and the creation of legal arrangements fulfil a key gatekeeper role to the wider financial community through the activities they undertake in the formation of legal persons and legal arrangements or in their management and administration. The guidance in relation to beneficial ownership information in this section is intended for legal professionals who are involved in such arrangements by acting in the capacity of a formation agent, company director, company secretary, office for service, nominee or other similar capacity.

206. Legal professionals are also required to undertake and document adequate risk assessment of clients/transactions to fully understand the nature of the underlying clients' business activity. Evidence could include business plans/governance documents, financial statements and company registry filings.

207. As DNFBPs, legal professionals are required to apply CDD measures to beneficial owners of legal persons and legal arrangements to whom they are providing advice or formation services. In some countries, a legal professional may be required for registering a legal person and will be responsible for providing basic and/or beneficial ownership information to the registry. A number of countries have notarial systems where a notary will attest to the accuracy of registry filings.

208. In their capacity as company directors, trustees or foundation officials of these legal persons and legal arrangements, legal professionals often represent these legal persons and legal arrangements in their dealings with other financial institutions and DNFBPs that are providing banking or audit services to these types of customer.

209. These financial institutions and other DNFBPs may request the CDD information collected and maintained by legal professionals, who because of their role as director or trustee, will act as the principal point of contact with the legal person or legal arrangement. These financial institutions and other DNFBPs may never meet the beneficial owners of the legal person or legal arrangement.

210. Under R.28, countries should ensure that legal professionals are subject to effective systems for monitoring and ensuring compliance with AML/CFT requirements, which includes identifying the beneficial owner/s and taking reasonable measures to verify them. R.24 and R.25, which deal with transparency of beneficial ownership of legal persons and legal arrangements, require countries to have mechanisms for ensuring that adequate, accurate and up-to-date information is available on a timely basis on these legal entities.

211. In accordance with R.28, legal professionals should be subject to risk-based supervision by a supervisor or SRB covering the beneficial ownership and record-keeping requirements of R.10 and R.11. The supervisor or SRB should have the supervisory framework, which can help in ascertaining that accurate and current basic and beneficial ownership information on legal persons and legal arrangements is maintained and will be available on a timely basis to competent authorities.

212. The supervisor or SRB should analyse the adequacy of the procedures and the controls, which legal professionals have established to identify and record the beneficial owner. In addition, they should undertake sample testing of client records on a representative basis to gauge the effectiveness of the application of those measures and the accessibility of accurate beneficial ownership information.

213. During onsite inspections, the supervisor or SRB should examine the policies, procedures and controls that are in place for on-boarding of new clients to establish what information and documentation is required where the client is a natural person or legal persons or arrangement. The supervisor or SRB should verify the adequacy of these procedures and controls to identify beneficial owners to understand the ownership and control structure of these legal persons and arrangements and to ascertain the business activity. For example, self-declaration on beneficial ownership provided by the client without any other mechanism to verify the information may not be adequate in all cases.

214. Sample testing of records will assist the supervisor or SRB in determining whether controls are effective for the accurate identification of beneficial ownership, accurate disclosure of that information to relevant parties and for establishing if that information is readily available. The extent of testing will be dependent on risk but the records selected should reflect the profile of the client base and include both new and existing clients.

215. The supervisor or SRB should consider the measures the legal professional has put in place for monitoring changes in the beneficial ownership of legal person and legal arrangements to whom they provide services to ensure that beneficial ownership information is accurate and current and to determine how timely updated filings are made, where relevant to a registry.

216. During examinations, the supervisor or SRB should consider whether to verify the beneficial ownership information available on the records of the legal professional with that held by the relevant registry, if any. The supervisor or SRB may also consider information from other competent authorities such as FIUs, public reports and information from other financial institutions or DNFBPs, to verify the efficacy of the legal professional's controls.

4.5.1. Sources of funds and wealth

217. Legal professionals should be subject to risk-based supervision by a supervisor or SRB covering the requirements to identify and evidence the source of funds and source of wealth for higher risk clients to whom they provide services. The supervisor or SRB should have the supervisory framework, which can help in ascertaining that accurate and current information on sources of funds and wealth is properly evidenced and available on a timely basis to competent authorities. The supervisor or SRB should analyse the adequacy of the procedures and the controls, which legal professionals have established to identify and record sources of wealth in arrangements.

4.6. Nominee arrangements

218. A nominee director is a person who has been appointed to the Board of Directors of the legal person who represents the interests and acts in accordance with instructions issued by another person, usually the beneficial owner.

219. A nominee shareholder is a natural or legal person who is officially recorded in the register of members and shareholders of a company as the holder of a certain number of specified shares, which are held on behalf of another person who is the beneficial owner. The shares may be held on trust or through a custodial agreement.

220. In a number of countries, legal professionals act or arrange for another person (either an individual or corporate) to act as a director and act or arrange for another person (either an individual or corporate) to act as a nominee shareholder for another person as part of their professional services. In accordance with R.24, one of the mechanisms to ensure that nominee shareholders and directors are not misused, is by subjecting these legal professionals to licensing and recording their status in company registries. Countries may rely on a combination of measures in this respect.

221. There are legitimate reasons for a legal professional to act as or provide directors to a legal person or act or provide nominee shareholders. These may include the settlement and safekeeping of shares in listed companies where post traded specialists act as nominee shareholders. Nominee director and nominee shareholder arrangements can be misused to hide the identity of the true beneficial owner of the legal person. There may be individuals prepared to lend their name as a director or shareholder of a legal person on behalf of another without disclosing the identity of whom they will take instructions from or whom they represent. They are sometimes referred to as “strawmen”.

222. Nominee directors and nominee shareholders can create obstacles to identifying the true beneficial owner of a legal person, particularly where the status is not disclosed. This is because it will be the identity of the nominee, which is disclosed in the corporate records of the legal person held by a registry and in the company records at its registered office. Company law in various countries does not recognise the status of a nominee director because in law it is the directors of the company who are liable for its activities and the directors have a duty to act in the best interest of the company.

223. The supervisor or SRB should be aware that undisclosed nominee arrangements may exist. They should consider whether undisclosed nominee arrangements would be identified and addressed during their onsite inspections and examination of the policies, procedures, controls and client records of the legal professional, including the CDD process and ongoing monitoring by the legal professional.

224. An undisclosed nominee arrangement may exist where there are the following (non-exhaustive) indicators:

- a) the profile of a director or shareholder is inconsistent with the activities of the company;
- b) the individual holds numerous appointments to unconnected companies;
- c) a nominee's source of wealth is inconsistent with the value and nature of the assets within the company;
- d) funds into and out of the company are sent to, or received from unidentified third party/ies;
- e) the directors or shareholders are accustomed to acting on instruction of another person; and
- f) requests or instructions are subject to minimal or no scrutiny and/or responded to extremely quickly without challenge by the individual/s purporting to act as the director/s.

ANNEX 1: Beneficial ownership information in relation to a company, trust or other legal arrangements to whom a legal professional provides services

1. Taking a RBA, the amount of information that should be obtained by the legal professional will depend on whether the legal professional is establishing or administering the trust, company or other legal entity or is acting as or providing a trustee or director of the trust, company or other legal entity. In these cases, a legal professional will be required to understand the general purpose behind the structure and the source of funds in the structure in addition to being able to identify the beneficial owners and controlling persons. A legal professional who is providing other services (e.g. acting as registered office) to a trust, company or other legal entity will be required to obtain sufficient information to enable it to be able to identify the beneficial owners and controlling persons of the trust, company or other legal entity.

2. A legal professional that is not acting as trustee may, in appropriate circumstances, rely on a synopsis prepared by another legal professional or accountant or TCSP providing services to the trust or relevant extracts from the trust deed itself to enable to identify the settlor, trustees, protector (if any), beneficiaries or natural persons exercising effective control. This is in addition to the requirement, where appropriate, to obtain evidence to verify the identity of such persons as discussed below.

In relation to a trust

3. As described above, depending on the services being provided to the trust, a legal professional should have policies and procedures in place to identify the following and, verify their identity using reliable, independent source documents, data or information (provided that the legal professional's policies should enable it to disregard source documents, data or information that is perceived to be unreliable) as described in more detail below:

- i. the settlor;
- ii. the protector;
- iii. the trustee(s), where the legal professional is not acting as trustee;
- iv. the named beneficiaries or class of beneficiaries, and
- v. any other natural person actually exercising effective control over the trust.

Settlor

- a) A settlor is generally any person (or persons) by whom the trust is made. A person is a settlor if he or she has provided (or has undertaken to provide) property or funds directly or indirectly for the trust. This requires there to be an element of bounty (i.e. the settlor must be intending to provide some form of benefit rather than being an independent third party transferring something to the trust for full consideration).
- b) A settlor may or may not be named in the trust deed. Legal professionals should have policies and procedures in place to identify and verify the identity of the real economic settlor.
- c) A legal professional establishing on behalf of a client or administering a trust, company or other legal entity or otherwise acting as or providing a trustee or director of a trustee, company or other legal entity should have policies and procedures in place (using a RBA) to identify the source of funds in the trust, company or other legal entity.

- d) It may be more difficult (if not impossible) for older trusts to identify the source of funds, where contemporaneous evidence may no longer be available. Evidence of source of funds may include reliable independent source documents, data or information, share transfer forms, bank statements, deeds of gift or letter of wishes.
- e) Where assets have been transferred to the trust from another trust, it will be necessary to obtain this information for both transferee and transferor trust.

Beneficiaries

- a) Legal professionals should have policies and procedures in place, adopting a RBA to enable them to form a reasonable belief that they know the true identity of the beneficiaries of the trust, and taking reasonable measures to verify the identity of the beneficiaries, such that the legal professionals are satisfied that they know who the beneficiaries are. This does not require the legal professional to verify the identity of all beneficiaries using reliable, independent source documents, data or information but the legal professionals should at least verify the identity of beneficiaries who have current fixed rights to distributions of income or capital or who actually receive distributions from the trust.
- b) Legal professionals should obtain sufficient information to enable them to identify beneficiaries who have fixed rights or fixed interests over income or capital of the trust (e.g. a life tenant).
- c) Where the beneficiaries of the trust have no fixed rights to capital and income (e.g. discretionary beneficiaries), legal professionals should obtain information to enable them to identify the named discretionary beneficiaries (e.g. as identified in the trust deed).
- d) Where beneficiaries are identified by reference to a class (e.g. children and issue of X) or where beneficiaries are minors under the law governing the trust, although legal professionals should satisfy themselves that these are the intended beneficiaries (e.g. by reference to the trust deed) they are not obliged to obtain additional information to verify the identity of the individual beneficiaries referred to in the class unless or until the trustees determine to make a distribution to such beneficiary.
- e) In some trusts, named individuals only become beneficiaries on the happening of a particular contingency (e.g. on attaining a specific age or on the death of another beneficiary or the termination of the trust period). In this case, a legal professional is not required to obtain additional information to verify the identity of such contingent beneficiaries unless or until the contingency is satisfied or until the trustees decide to make a distribution to such a beneficiary.
- f) A legal professional who administers the trust or company or other legal entity owned by a trust or otherwise provides or acts as trustee or director to the trustee, company or other legal entity should have procedures in place so that there is a requirement to update the information provided if named beneficiaries are added or removed from the class of beneficiaries, or beneficiaries receive distributions or benefits for the first time after the information has been provided, or there are other changes to the class of beneficiaries.
- g) A legal professional is not obliged to obtain other information about beneficiaries other than to enable the legal professional to satisfy itself that it knows who the beneficiaries truly are or identify whether any named beneficiary or beneficiary who has received a distribution from a trust is a PEP.

Natural person exercising effective control

- a) A legal professional providing services to the trust should have procedures in place to identify any natural person exercising effective control over the trust.
- b) For these purposes "control" means a power (whether exercisable alone or jointly with another person or with the consent of another person) under the trust instrument or by law to:
 - i. dispose of, advance, lend, invest, pay or apply trust property;
 - ii. direct, make or approve trust distributions;
 - iii. vary or terminate the trust;
 - iv. add or remove a person as a beneficiary or to or from a class of beneficiaries; and/or
 - v. appoint or remove trustees.
- c) A legal professional who administers the trust or otherwise act as trustee must, in addition, also obtain information to satisfy itself that it knows the identity of any other individual who has power to give another individual "control" over the trust; by conferring on such individual powers as described in paragraph (b) above.

Corporate settlors and beneficiaries

4. These examples are subject to the more general guidance on what information should be obtained by the legal professional to enable it to identify settlors and beneficiaries. It is not intended to suggest that a legal professional must obtain more information about a beneficiary that is an entity where it would not need to obtain such information if the beneficiary is an individual.

- a) In certain cases, the settlor, beneficiary, protector or other person exercising effective control over the trust may be a company or other legal entity. In such a case, a legal professional should have policies and procedures in place to enable it to identify (where appropriate) the beneficial owner or controlling person in relation to the entity.
- b) In the case of a settlor which is a legal entity, a legal professional should satisfy itself that it has sufficient information to understand the purpose behind the formation of the trust by the entity. For example, a company may establish a trust for the benefit of its employees or a legal entity may act as nominee for an individual settlor or on the instructions of an individual who has provided funds to the legal entity for this purpose. In the case of a legal entity acting as nominee for an individual settlor or on the instructions of an individual, the legal professional should take steps to satisfy itself as to the identity of the economic settlor of the trust (i.e. the person who has provided funds to the legal entity to enable it to settle funds into the trust) and the controlling persons in relation to the legal entity at the time the assets were settled into trust. If the corporate settlor retains powers over the trust (e.g. a power of revocation), the legal professional should satisfy itself that it knows the current beneficial owners and controlling persons of the corporate settlor and understands the reason for the change in ownership or control.
- c) In the case of a beneficiary which is an entity (e.g., a charitable trust or company), a legal professional should satisfy itself that it understands the reason behind the use of an entity as a beneficiary. If there is an individual beneficial owner of the entity, the legal professional should satisfy itself that it has sufficient information to identify the individual beneficial owner.

Individual and Corporate trustee

- a) Where a legal professional is not itself acting as trustee, it is necessary for the legal professional to obtain information to enable it to identify and verify the identity of the trustee (s) and, where the trustee is a corporate trustee, identify the corporate entity, obtain information on the identity of the beneficial owners of the trustee, and take reasonable measure to verify their identity.
- b) Where the trustee is a listed entity (or an entity forming part of a listed group) or an entity established and regulated to carry on trust business in a jurisdiction identified by credible sources as having appropriate AML/CFT laws, regulations and other measures, the legal professional should obtain information to enable it to satisfy itself as to the identity of the directors or other controlling persons. The legal professional can rely on external evidence, such as information in the public domain, to satisfy itself as to the beneficial owner of the regulated trustee (e.g., the website of the body that regulates the trustee and of the regulated trustee itself).
- c) It is not uncommon for families to set up trust companies to act for trusts for the benefit of that family. These are typically called private trust companies and may have a restricted trust licence that enables them to act as trustee for a limited class of trusts. Such private trust companies are often ultimately owned by a fully regulated trust company as trustee of another trust. In such a case, the legal professional should satisfy itself that it understands how the private trust company operates and the identity of the directors of the private trust company and, where relevant, the owner of the private trust company. Where the private trust company is itself owned by a listed or regulated entity as described above, the legal professional does not need to obtain detailed information to identify the directors or controlling persons of that entity that acts as shareholder of the private trust company.

Individual and Corporate protector - key to identify

- a) Where a legal professional is not itself acting as a protector and a protector has been appointed, the legal professionals should obtain information to identify and verify the identity of the protector.
- b) Where the protector is a legal entity, the legal professional should obtain sufficient information that it can satisfy itself who is the controlling person and beneficial owner of the protector, and take reasonable measure to verify their identity.
- c) Where the protector is a listed entity (or an entity forming part of a listed group) or an entity established and regulated to carry on trust business in a jurisdiction identified by credible sources as having appropriate AML/CFT laws, regulations and other measures, the legal professional should obtain information to enable it to satisfy itself as to the identity of the directors or other controlling persons. The legal professional can rely on external evidence, such as information in the public domain to satisfy itself as to the beneficial owner of the regulated protector (e.g. the website of the body that regulates the protector and of the regulated protector itself).

ANNEX 2: Sources of further information

1. Various sources of information exist that may help governments and legal professionals in their development of a RBA. Although not an exhaustive list, this Annex highlights a number of useful web-links that governments and legal professionals may wish to draw upon. They provide additional sources of information, and further assistance might also be obtained from other information sources such as AML/CFT assessments.

Legislation and Court Decisions

2. The rulings by the ECJ of June 26th, 2007 by the Belgium Constitution Court of January 23rd 2008 and the French Conseil d'État of April 10th, 2008 confirmed that AML/CFT regulation cannot require or permit the breach of the legal professional's duty of professional secrecy when performing the essential activities of the profession.

3. The Court of First Instance in the Joined Cases T-125/03 & T-253/03 Akzo Nobel Chemicals Ltd and Akros Chemicals Ltd v Commission of the European Communities has restated the ruling in the AM&S case that professional secrecy "meets the need to ensure that every person must be able, without constraint, to consult a legal professional whose profession entails the giving of independent legal advice to all those in need of it (AM&S, paragraph 18). That principle is thus closely linked to the concept of the legal professional's role as collaborating in the administration of justice by the courts (AM&S, paragraph 24).

4. In Judgement of the Court (Grand Chamber) of 26 June 2007 in Case C-305/05 in a question referred for a preliminary ruling, the Court holds that "the obligations of information and of cooperation with the authorities responsible for combating money laundering [...] and imposed on legal professionals by Article 2a(5) of Directive 91/308⁴⁸, account being taken of the second subparagraph of Article 6(3)⁴⁹ thereof, do not infringe the right to a fair trial as guaranteed by Article 6 of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and Article 6(2) EU". The Court reaches this conclusion by considering that: (i) obligations of information and cooperation apply to legal professionals only in so far as they advise their client in the preparation or execution of certain transactions; (ii) as soon as the legal professional acting in connection with a transaction is called upon for assistance in defending the client or in representing him before the courts, or for advice as to the manner of instituting or avoiding judicial proceedings, that legal professional is exempt from the obligations of information and cooperation, regardless of whether the information has been received or obtained before, during or after the proceedings. An exemption of that kind safeguards the right of the client to a fair trial; (iii) the requirements relating to the right to a fair trial do not preclude the obligations of information and cooperation from being imposed on legal professionals acting specifically in connection with the specified activities, in cases where the second subparagraph of Article 6(3) of that directive does not apply, where those obligations are justified by the need to combat money laundering effectively, in view of its evident influence on the rise of organised crime”⁵⁰.

⁴⁸ Article 2a(5) of Directive 91/308 listed the specified transactional activities in whose performance legal professionals were to be considered as obliged entities.

5. Michaud v. France case of 6 December 2012. This case concerned the obligation on French legal professionals to report their suspicions regarding possible ML activities by their clients. Among other things, the applicant, a member of the Paris Bar and the Bar Council, submitted that this obligation, which resulted from the transposition of European directives, was in conflict with Article 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights, which protects the confidentiality of lawyer-client relations.

6. The European Court of Human Rights in its judgement held that there had been no violation of Article 8 of the Convention. While stressing the importance of the confidentiality of lawyer-client relations and of legal professional privilege, it considered, however, that the obligation to report suspicions pursued the legitimate aim of prevention of disorder or crime, since it was intended to combat ML and related criminal offences, and that it was necessary in pursuit of that aim. The Court held that the obligation to report suspicions, as implemented in France, did not interfere disproportionately with legal professional privilege, since legal professionals were not subject to the above requirement when defending litigants and the legislation had put in place a filter to protect professional privilege, thus ensuring that legal professionals did not submit their reports directly to the authorities, but to the president of their Bar association.

7. Directive (EU) 2015/849 (AMLD) provides:

- Art. 2 AMLD: 1. This Directive shall apply to the following obliged entities: [...] (3) the following natural or legal persons acting in the exercise of their professional activities: [...] (b) notaries and other independent legal professionals, where they participate, whether by acting on behalf of and for their client in any financial or real estate transaction, or by assisting in the planning or carrying out of transactions for their client concerning the: (i) buying and selling of real property or business entities; (ii) managing of client money, securities or other assets; (iii) opening or management of bank, savings or securities accounts (iv) organisation of contributions necessary for the creation, operation or management of companies; (v) creation, operation or management of trusts, companies, foundations, or similar structures;

8. Art. 34(2) “Member States shall not apply the obligations laid down in Article 33(1) to notaries, other independent legal professionals, auditors, external accountants and tax advisors only to the strict extent that such exemption relates to information that they receive from, or obtain on, one of their clients, in the course of ascertaining the legal position of their client, or performing their task of defending or representing that client in, or concerning, judicial proceedings, including providing advice on instituting or avoiding such proceedings, whether such information is received or obtained before, during or after such proceedings”⁵¹.

9. The United States recognises a “crime-fraud” exception to attorney-client privilege. As the U.S. Supreme Court observed, “[i]t is the purpose of the crime-fraud exception to the attorney-client privilege to assure that the ‘seal of secrecy’ ... between legal professional and client does not extend to communications ‘made for the purpose of getting advice for the commission of a fraud.’” United States v. Zolin, 491 U.S. 554, 562 (1989) (internal citation omitted). Before determining whether this exception applies, there must be a showing of “a factual basis adequate to support a good faith belief by a reasonable person that in camera review of the materials may reveal evidence to establish a claim that the crime-fraud exception applies.” Id. at 572. Under case law in the U.S. further developing this principle, the crime-fraud exception can apply even where the attorney acts innocently—“the lawyers’ innocence does not preserve the attorney-client privilege against the crime-fraud exception. The privilege is the client’s, so it is the client’s knowledge and intentions that are of paramount concern to the application of the crime-fraud exception; the attorney need know nothing about the client’s ongoing or planned illicit activity for the exception to apply.” United States v. Chen, 99 F.3d 1495, 1504 (9th Cir. 1996) (internal quotations omitted). Under these principles, persons (both legal and natural) have been obliged to disclose pursuant to subpoenas or other legal process factual information that otherwise would have been subject to attorney-client privilege. See, e.g., In re Grand Jury, 705 F.3d 133, 155-61 (3d Cir. 2012).

ANNEX 3: Glossary of terminology

Beneficial Owner

Beneficial owner refers to the natural person(s) who ultimately owns or controls a customer and/or the natural person on whose behalf a transaction is being conducted. It also includes those persons who exercise ultimate effective control over a legal person or arrangement.

Competent Authorities

Competent authorities refers to all public authorities with designated responsibilities for combating money laundering and/or terrorist financing. In particular, this includes the FIU; the authorities that have the function of investigating and/or prosecuting money laundering, associated predicate offences and terrorist financing, and seizing/freezing and confiscating criminal assets; authorities receiving reports on cross-border transportation of currency and BNIs; and authorities that have AML/CFT supervisory or monitoring responsibilities aimed at ensuring compliance by financial institutions and DNFBPs with AML/CFT requirements. SRBs are not to be regarded as a competent authorities.

Core Principles

Core Principles refers to the Core Principles for Effective Banking Supervision issued by the Base Committee on Banking Supervision, the Objectives and Principles for Securities Regulation issued by the International Organization of Securities Commissions, and the Insurance Supervisory Principles issued by the International Association of Insurance Supervisors.

Designated Non-Financial Businesses and Professions (DNFBPs)

Designated non-financial businesses and professions means:

- a) Casinos (which also includes internet and ship based casinos).
- b) Real estate agents.
- c) Dealers in precious metals.
- d) Dealers in precious stones.
- e) Lawyers, notaries, other independent legal professionals and accountants – this refers to sole practitioners, partners or employed professionals within professional firms. It is not meant to refer to ‘internal’ professionals that are employees of other types of businesses, nor to professionals working for government agencies, who may already be subject to AML/CFT measures.
- f) Trust and Company Service Providers refers to all persons or businesses that are not covered elsewhere under the FATF Recommendations, and which as a business, provide any of the following services to third parties:
 - Acting as a formation agent of legal persons;
 - Acting as (or arranging for another person to act as) a director or secretary of a company, a partner of a partnership, or a similar position in relation to other legal persons;
 - Providing a registered office; business address or accommodation, correspondence or administrative address for a company, a partnership or any other legal person or arrangement;
 - Acting as (or arranging for another person to act as) a trustee of an express trust or performing the equivalent function for another form of legal arrangement;

- Acting as (or arranging for another person to act as) a nominee shareholder for another person.

Express Trust

Express trust refers to a trust clearly created by the settlor, usually in the form of a document e.g. a written deed of trust. They are to be contrasted with trusts that come into being through the operation of the law and that do not result from the clear intent or decision of a settlor to create a trust or similar legal arrangements (e.g. constructive trust).

FATF Recommendations

Refers to the FATF 40 Recommendations.

Legal Person

Legal person refers to any entities other than natural persons that can establish a permanent client relationship with a legal professional or otherwise own property. This can include bodies corporate, foundations, anstalt, partnerships, or associations and other relevantly similar entities.

Legal Professional

In this Guidance, the term “Legal professional” refers to legal professionals, civil law notaries, common law notaries, and other independent legal professionals.

Politically Exposed Persons (PEPs)

Foreign and domestic PEPs are individuals who are or have been entrusted by a foreign country or domestically with prominent public functions, for example Heads of State or of government, senior politicians, senior government, judicial or military officials, senior executives of state owned corporations, important political party officials. Persons who are or have been entrusted with a prominent function by an international organisation refers to members of senior management, i.e. directors, deputy directors and members of the board or equivalent functions. The definition of PEPs is not intended to cover middle ranking or more junior individuals in the foregoing categories.

Red Flags

Any fact or set of facts or circumstances that, when viewed on their own or in combination with other facts and circumstances, indicate a higher risk of illicit activity. A “red flag” may be used as a short hand for any indicator of risk that puts an investigating legal professional on notice that further checks or other appropriate safeguarding actions will be required. The mere presence of a red flag indicator is not necessarily a basis for a suspicion of ML or TF, as a client may be able to provide a legitimate explanation. Red flag indicators should assist legal professionals in applying a risk-based approach to their CDD requirements. Where there are a number of red flag indicators, it is more likely that a legal professional should have a suspicion that ML or TF is occurring.

Self-regulatory body (SRB)

A SRB is a body that represents a profession (e.g. legal professionals, notaries, other independent legal professionals or accountants), and which is made up of members from the profession, has a role in regulating the persons who are qualified to enter and who practise in the profession, and also performs certain supervisory or monitoring type functions. Such bodies should enforce rules to ensure that high ethical and moral standards are maintained by those practising the profession.

Supervisors

Supervisors refers to the designated competent authorities or non-public bodies with responsibilities aimed at ensuring compliance by financial institutions (“financial supervisors”) and/or DNFBPs with requirements to combat money laundering and terrorist financing. Non-public bodies (which could include certain types of SRBs) should have the power to supervise and sanction financial institutions or DNFBPs in relation to the AML/CFT requirements. These non-public bodies should also be empowered by law to exercise the functions they perform, and be supervised by a competent authority in relation to such functions.

ANNEX 4: Examples of Red flags highlighting suspicious activities or transactions for legal professionals⁵³

- a) The transaction is unusual, e.g.:
 - the type of operation being notarised is clearly inconsistent with the size, age, or activity of the legal entity or natural person acting;
 - the transactions are unusual because of their size, nature, frequency, or manner of execution;
 - there are remarkable and highly significant differences between the declared price and the approximate actual values in accordance with any reference which could give an approximate idea of this value or in the judgement of the legal professional;
 - a non-profit organisation requests services for purposes or transactions not compatible with those declared or not typical for that body.
 - the transaction involves a disproportional amount of private funding, bearer cheques or cash, especially if it is inconsistent with the socio-economic profile of the individual or the company's economic profile.
- b) The customer or third party is contributing a significant sum in cash as collateral provided by the borrower/debtor rather than simply using those funds directly, without logical explanation.
- c) The source of funds is unusual:
 - third party funding either for the transaction or for fees/taxes involved with no apparent connection or legitimate explanation;
 - funds received from or sent to a foreign country when there is no apparent connection between the country and the client;
 - funds received from or sent to high-risk countries.
- d) The client is using multiple bank accounts or foreign accounts without good reason.
- e) Private expenditure is funded by a company, business or government.
- f) Selecting the method of payment has been deferred to a date very close to the time of notarisation, in a jurisdiction where the method of payment is usually included in the contract, particularly if no guarantee securing the payment is established, without a logical explanation.
- g) An unusually short repayment period has been set without logical explanation.
- h) Mortgages are repeatedly repaid significantly prior to the initially agreed maturity date, with no logical explanation.
- i) The asset is purchased with cash and then rapidly used as collateral for a loan.

⁵³ See also the Joint FATF and Egmont Group Report on Concealment of Beneficial Ownership, July 2018, Annex E – Indicators of concealed beneficial ownership.

- j) There is a request to change the payment procedures previously agreed upon without logical explanation, especially when payment instruments are suggested that are not appropriate for the common practice used for the ordered transaction.
- k) Finance is provided by a lender, either a natural or legal person, other than a credit institution, with no logical explanation or economic justification.
- l) The collateral being provided for the transaction is currently located in a high-risk country.
- m) There has been a significant increase in capital for a recently incorporated company or successive contributions over a short period of time to the same company, with no logical explanation.
- n) There has been an increase in capital from a foreign country, which either has no relationship to the company or is high risk.
- o) The company receives an injection of capital or assets in kind that is excessively high in comparison with the business, size or market value of the company performing, with no logical explanation.
- p) There is an excessively high or low price attached to the securities transferred, with regard to any circumstance indicating such an excess (e.g. volume of revenue, trade or business, premises, size, knowledge of declaration of systematic losses or gains) or with regard to the sum declared in another operation.
- q) Large financial transactions, especially if requested by recently created companies, where these transactions are not justified by the corporate purpose, the activity of the customer or the possible group of companies to which it belongs or other justifiable reasons.
